Evaluating Theories Of Language Evidence From Disordered Communication:

Evaluating Theories of Language Karen Dodd, Ruth Campbell, Linda Worrall, 2008-04-30 One approach to the study of language has been to describe people whose ability to communicate is impaired. Some researchers have argued that it is possible to identify the component mental processes that contribute to the ability to communicate by describing the ways in which language can break down. Other researchers have expressed doubts about the extent to which data from impairment reflects normal language function. This volume reflects the problems of constructing theory of how the normal brain deals with language from data from impaired individuals from the perspective of a range of disciplines: psycholinguistics, linguistics, neurophysiology and speech language pathology. The chapters include critiques of methodology, application of new technology, the study of bilingual people and cross linguistic studies. A range of language skills is discussed: phonology, prosody, syntax, semantics, reading and spelling in the context of both developmental and acquired impairments, hearing loss, cerebellar dysarthria, subcortical aphasia, cortical aphasia, phonological disorder and dyslexia. This book includes contributions from researchers and clinicians on both sides of the Atlantic as well as from Australia and Hong Kong.

Cross-Linguistic Study of Acquired Reading Disorders Prathibha Karanth, 2012-12-06 The acquisition of reading, the teaching of reading and the difficulties encountered have been of substantial interest to a wide range of researchers and practitioners for centuries. Given the increasing centrality of literacy in modern life, they are now of even greater interest to an ever widening base of professionals. The study of the acquired reading disorders, though in existence for over a century, received enormous impetus with the publication of a seminal paper by Marshall and Newcombe in 1966 leading to a neuropsychological model of reading. Over the last 30 years, within the single case study design, there has been extensive and exceedingly fine grained research on individuals with acquired disorders of reading in an attempt to establish the validity of these models of reading and the human brain. In addition, these models have had considerable influence on models of the acquisition of reading in children and their concomitant difficulties. Much of this research has been in readers of the alphabetic scripts, particularly the opaque English script. During the last decade or so, there has been increasing evidence, particularly in research on reading acquisition, that what is true of alphabetic scripts like English may not be universally true of all of the scripts of the world. This has led to considerable research into the process of learning to read and write and on the factors affecting reading, which are the touchstone of the models within broader cross linguistic and cross cultural perspectives.

The Viability of the Rhetorical Tradition Richard Graff, Arthur E. Walzer, Janet M. Atwill, 2012-02-01 The Viability of the Rhetorical Tradition reconsiders the relationship between rhetorical theory, practice and pedagogy. Continuing the line of questioning begun in the 1980s, contributors examine the duality of a rhetorical canon in determining if past practice can make us more or less able to address contemporary concerns. Also examined is the role of tradition as a limiting or inspiring force, rhetoric as a discipline, rhetoric's contribution to interest in civic education and citizenship and the possibilities digital Speech and Language Disorders Associated with Subcortical Pathology Bruce E. Murdoch, 2009-03-25 This book provides comprehensive coverage of speech and language disorders arising from pathological processes involving the subcortical structures of the brain. It gives an understanding of these disorders in terms of their neuropathological basis, clinical symptomatology and prognosis. A full discussion of contemporary models and theories of subcortical participation in speech and language processing is given, including discussion of the possible roles of structures such as the basal ganglia, subthalamic nucleus, thalamus and cerebellum. The book covers speech and language disorders associated with a variety of subcortical conditions ranging from major degenerative conditions such as Parkinson's Disease, Huntington's chorea and dystonia through to acquired non-degenerative subcortical lesions arising from, for example, cerebrovascular accidents and stereotactically surgically induced lesions. In addition, a full description of the relevant assessment and treatment procedures currently recommended for use for each of the subcortical communication disorders is given.

Clinical Aphasiology Martin John Ball, Jack Damico, 2007 This book presents a collection of cutting edge work from leading researchers and clinicians around the world on a range of topics within Clinical Aphasiology. However, more than this, the volume is also a tribute to Chris Code, one of the foremost scholars in the field. Professor Code has made a galvanizing impact on the field as a savant, a motivator and an impresario of trends which have resulted in several significant developments in the field. In the first chapter of this book, the editors outline the considerable contributions Chris Code has made to the area. The remaining contents have been divided into three main approaches to the study of aphasia, reflecting Professor Code's own interests. First are the contributions that fall under the heading of Conceptual Considerations. These are mainly interdisciplinary in nature, spanning linguistics, phonetics, psychology and neurology, as well as social aspects of communication disorders. The second section of the book deals with Research Considerations, with chapters ranging from how the study of disrupted communication can inform models of normal language processing through tone production and processing in speakers with aphasia to anomia and progressive multifocal leukoencephalopathy. Each of these chapters explores different aspects of research methodology, including quantitative and qualitative research. The final section of the collection deals with Clinical Considerations; the chapters here cover counselling, computerized training, cultural and linguistic diversity in aphasia, right hemisphere disorders and communication problems in the dementias. Clinical Aphasiology will be an invaluable tool for both students and practitioners in speech and language pathology, psychology, neurology and related fields.
