

General Theory of Multiple-Cage Induction Motors

S. S. L. CHANG
ASSOCIATE AIEE

POWER COMPANIES are usually particular about the starting current and running power factor of an induction motor. However, induction-motor manufacturers cannot possibly supply a motor much better in these respects than the present National Electrical Manufacturers' Association Design C standards, even though ideal materials should be discovered in the future.

Both the primary resistance and the saturation effect on leakage reactance are neglected in this analysis. While the first assumption can be fulfilled only with idealized material, it is a close enough approximation in motors of 20 horsepower or above. Under the assumptions, the motor can be analyzed with the help of a well-known theorem which states that as soon as the imaginary component of a physical network function is known for all values of frequency, the real component is totally determined up to an additive constant. In this case, the input reactive volt-amperes is the real component; the torque in synchronous watts the imaginary component; the slip corresponds to frequency; and the magnetizing current is the additive constant.

Figure 1 shows the assumed torque as a function of slip. Figures 2 and 3 show the full-load power factor and starting kilovolt-amperes per horsepower as functions of full-load slip and $k_{r\infty}$. The basic leakage factor $k_{r\infty}$ is defined as $1 - X_a/X_b$ where X_a is the leakage reactance not including the slot leakage of inner cages and X_b is the total reactance. Since no special configuration or multiplicity of rotor slots is assumed, the result indicates that the best obtainable starting current and full-load power factor are fixed as soon as the full-load slip is chosen. Since the value of $k_{r\infty}$ is not influenced by the selection of inner cage dimensions, altering the inner cage design would not improve the starting current and power factor without lowering the torque curve in general or in part. Real improvements can be accomplished only by measures which increase $k_{r\infty}$, such as reducing the air gap, increasing the number of stator slots, and so forth. All of these measures have practical limitations.

The theory also provides a guide for designing rotor laminations. Let X_a be the total leakage reactance at no load, R_a be the rotor resistance of the outermost cage only, and R_b be the rotor resistance with all cages in parallel. X_a , R_a , and R_b are determined by equations 1, 2, and 3.

$$\frac{X_a}{X_b} = \frac{1}{s} \left(2.57 + \ln \frac{s}{s_m} \right) \quad (1)$$

$$\frac{R_a}{X_b} = \frac{X_a}{X_b} \frac{s}{2} \quad (2)$$

$$\frac{R_b}{X_b} = \frac{X_a}{X_b} \frac{s_m}{s} \quad (3)$$

In these equations, s_m is the slip at maximum torque point and is about equal to 3.73 times the full-load slip; s_2 is the slip at which the torque tapers off. The value of s_2 is usually in the range of 1.5 to 2.5. The value of s_2 is chosen to compromise the full-load power factor and starting current. Both are lower for higher value of s_2 and conversely.

The values of R_a and R_b determine the total slot area and the slot area of the outermost cage, respectively. X_a determines the combined slot constant of the inner cages. Though all these conditions do not completely determine the slot shape, they are more than a starting point.
