Global Development and the Environment Joel Darmstadter, 1992 Twenty years after the landmark Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment in 1972 the United Nations has convened a Conference on Environment and Development UNCED in Rio de Janeiro in June 1992 The 1989 UN resolution calling for the conference singles out among other global problems issues of biodiversity water and other natural resources atmospheric integrity and human health as ones whose management requires strengthened international cooperation and attention Whatever explicit and effective commitments to control greenhouse gases that threaten global warming for example are negotiated at UNCED profound problems relating to the linked pursuit of environmental natural resource and economic objectives are certain to survive the two week meeting of government leaders technical experts and representatives of environmental constituencies To be sure participants may well assert that the goals of environmental protection natural resource adequacy and economic growth are compatible But a probing of the question of sustainability of development inspires less confidence that potential problems and conflicts in the pursuit of these goals are fully appreciated in the international community much less that the consensus needed to easily achieve the goals will be forthcoming In Global Development and the Environment Perspectives on Sustainability researchers at Resources for the Future examine some of the enduring issues whether or not officially under consideration at the conference or raised there informally that cannot be ignored in any attempt to pursue aspirations concerning the environment and development The lasting value of UNCED may depend on the extent to which it diverse participants couple political rhetoric with willingness to confront these difficult issues once this earth summit fades into history

Globalization, Political Institutions and the Environment in Developing Countries Gabriele Spilker, 2013 Though industrialized countries are usually the ones indicted when environmental pollution is discussed over the few last years the rate of emissions in developing countries has increased by a startling amount The fallout from this increase is evidenced by the struggle of cities like Beijing to improve their air quality Yet there also exist developing countries such as Thailand that have managed to limit their emissions to more tolerable levels raising the question why are some developing countries more willing or able to take care of their environment than others In this volume Gabriele Spilker proposes two factors for the differences in developing countries environmental performance integration into the international system and domestic political institutions Focusing on developing countries generally but also closely examining important global powers such as China and India Spilker employs a rigorous quantitative analysis to demonstrate the importance of considering various aspects of the international system in order to draw more comprehensive conclusions about how globalization affects environmental performance She asserts that democratic political institutions can shield developing countries from the negative consequences of either trade or foreign direct investment But at the same time developing countries by avoiding demanding commitments are more likely to use environmental treaties as a cover than as a real plan of action Adding a new dimension to the existing body of research on environmental quality and commitment Spilker convincingly demonstrates how international and domestic political factors interact to shape developing countries ability and willingness to care for their natural environment
