Empirical Modeling of the Economy and the Environment Christoph Böhringer, Andreas Löschel, 2012-12-06 ZhongXiang Zhang East West Center Honolulu uses a global model based on marginal abatement cost curves for 12 world regions to estimate the contributions of the three flexibility mechanisms under the Kyoto Protocol i.e. emissions trading joint implementation and the clean development mechanism He shows how the reduction in compliance costs of industrialized regions depends on the extent to which the flexibility mechanisms will be available Not surprisingly the fewer the restrictions on the use of flexibility mechanisms will be the greater the gains from their use These gains are unevenly distributed however with industrialized regions that have the highest autarkic marginal abatement costs tending to benefit the most Restrictions on the use of flexibility mechanisms not only reduce the potential of the industrialized regions efficiency gains but are also not beneficial to developing countries since they restrict the total financial flows to developing countries under the clean development mechanism Christoph Böhringer ZEW Mannheim Glenn W Harrison University of South Carolina Columbia and Thomas F Rutherford University of Colorado Boulder evaluate the welfare implications of alternative ways in which the EU could distribute its aggregate emission reduction commitment under the Kyoto Protocol across member states Using a large scale CGE model they compare a uniform proportional cutback in emissions and the actual EU burden sharing agreement with an equitable allocation scheme derived from an endogenous burden sharing calculation The latter equalizes the relative welfare cost across member states
