Abstract

The study of environmental victimization has been notably absent from the vast majority of academic and policy discussions surrounding victims of crime, despite the growing prevalence of 'green' issues and 'environmental harms' in the 21st century. This article presents a forward-looking examination of the possibilities for a 'green victimology' to complement the developing field of 'green criminology' — mapping out possibilities for its theoretical context, likely scope and key research questions. In sum, the article presents the case for a critical, interdisciplinary approach to the question of environmental victims that takes careful note of developments in the field of human and environmental rights. The article also examines the scope of 'environmental harm' and 'environmental victimization', concluding that, like other victim groups, environmental victims are far from homogeneous. In particular, the article calls for empirical work to ascertain the views and needs of environmental victims themselves.

Keywords

Critical victimology, environmental harm, green victimology, interdisciplinarity

In this article I intend to discuss the adaptability of victimological study to the question of 'environmental victimization'. The impact on those affected by environment crime, or other environmentally damaging activities, is one that has received scarce attention in the mainstream victimological literature. The role or position of such victims in criminal justice and/or other processes has likewise rarely been the topic of academic debate. I have recently expanded upon various aspects of this subject and surrounding issues at greater length (Hall, 2013), but for the purposes of this article I wish to expand specifically on what a so-called 'green victimology' might look like, together with some of the particular questions and challenges it will face. To this end

Environmental Victims:

Environmental Victims Christopher Williams, 2014-04-23 This study looks at environmental problems from the perspective of the victims The bottom line consequences are often damaging to the health of individuals or communities and they raise a wide range of issues concerning justice international and environmental law public health occupational health and health policy social policy and welfare international relations and security All of these issues are addressed by the contributors and the work is designed for a spectrum of readers whether concerned with industrial hazards and occupational health relevant agreements or treaties environmental refugees or the roles of state business and other actors Victims of Environmental Harm Matthew Hall (Criminologist), 2013 In recent years the increasing focus on climate change and environmental degradation has prompted unprecedented attention being paid towards the criminal liability of individuals organisations and even states for polluting activities These developments have given rise to a new area of criminological study often called green criminology Yet in all the theorising that has taken place in this area there is still a marked absence of specific focus on those actually suffering harm as a result of environmental degradation This book represents a unique attempt to substantively conceptualise and examine the place of such environmental victims in criminal justice systems both nationally and internationally Grounded in a comparative approach and drawing on critical criminological arguments this volume examines many of the areas traditionally considered by victimologists in relation to victims of environmental crime and more widely environmental harm These include victims rights compensation treatment by criminal justice systems and participation in that process The book approaches the issue of environmental victimisation from a social harms perspective as opposed to a criminal harms one thus problematising the definitions of environmental crime found within most jurisdictions Victims of Environmental Harm concludes by mapping out the contours of further research into a developing green victimology and how this agenda might inform criminal justice reform and policy making at national and global levels This book will be of interest to researchers across a number of disciplines including criminology international law victimology socio legal studies and physical sciences as well as professionals involved in policy making processes Environmental Crime and its Victims Toine Spapens, Rob White, Marieke Kluin, 2016-05-06 Environmental crime is one of the most profitable and fastest growing areas of international criminal activity These types of crime however do not always produce an immediate consequence and the harm may be diffused As such the complexity of victimization in terms of time space impact and who or what is victimized is one of the reasons why governments and the enforcement community have trouble in finding suitable and effective responses This book provides a diverse and provocative array of arguments critiques and recommendations from leading researchers and scholars in the field of green criminology The chapters are divided into three main sections the first part deals with specific characteristics of some of the major types of environmental crime and its perpetrators the second focuses explicitly on the problem of victimization in cases of environmental crime and the third addresses the question of how to tackle this problem. Discussing these topics from the point of view of green criminological theory, sociology, law, enforcement, community wellbeing, environmental activism, and victimology, this book will be of great interest to all those concerned about crime and the environment.

The U.S. Administrative State and the Protection of Environmental Crime Victims Joshua Ozymy, Melissa Jarrell Ozymy, 2024-07-30. This accessible book provides the first comprehensive analysis of environmental crime victims within criminal prosecutions in the United States. By combining empirical analysis of criminal investigations undertaken by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency from 1983-2022 with narrative discussion of numerous related criminal prosecutions, it provides novel insights to help advance a stronger empirical understanding of how the administrative state protects victims of environmental harm, punishes environmental offenders, and aids in furthering the development of an environmental victimology.

Environmental Crime and Restorative Justice Mark Hamilton, 2021-03-01. This book explores the use of restorative justice approaches in the context of environmental crimes. It critically assesses regular criminal justice approaches with regard to green crimes and explores restorative justice conferencing as an alternative. Focussing on justice approaches in Australia and New Zealand, it argues that court processes following environmental offending provide minimal to no offender and victim voice, interaction, and input, rendering them invisible. It proposes a third measure of justice: that of meaningful involvement beyond that of fair procedure and outcome. It suggests the use of restorative justice conferencing as a facilitated dialogue between stakeholders to crime or conflict as a vehicle to operationalise and achieve justice as meaningful involvement. This book speaks to those interested in green criminology, victimology, and environmental law.

Victims of Crime Matthew Hall, 2018-01-18. This volume critically engages with the development of official policy and reform in relation to the support of victims of crime both within and beyond the criminal justice system of England and Wales. Since the election of the Conservative Liberal Democrat Coalition Government in May 2010, it is argued that victimization has increasingly taken on a greater cultural resonance both in England and Wales and in other industrialised countries. Images of terrorism, public debates around the handling of sexual victimisation by the courts, and the issue of child sexual exploitation have catapulted victim issues into the public consciousness like never before, generating a new form of what Hall terms victim capital. As such, this book utilises a combination of cultural, victimological, analysis, governance theory, and legal scholarship to address fundamental questions concerning the drivers and impact of victim policy in England and Wales in the 21st century. An engaging and original study, this book will be of particular interest to scholars of victimology and the criminal justice system, as well as activists and policy makers.

Environmental Crime in Transnational Context Toine Spapens, Rob White, Wim Huisman, 2016-06-10. Environmental crime is one of the most profitable and fastest growing areas of international criminal activity. The increasing cross-border scope of environmental crimes and harms is one of the reasons why governments and the enforcement community have trouble in finding the proper responses. Law enforcement cooperation between western industrialized states is often time consuming and problematic and the problems increase exponentially when environmental criminals take advantage of situations where government and law enforcement are weak This book provides an overview of the developments and problems in the field of transnational environmental crimes and harms addressing these issues from perspectives such as enforcement deterrence compliance and emission trading schemes Divided into four parts the authors consider global issues in green criminology responses to transnational environmental crimes and harms alternative methods to combat environmental crime and specific types of crimes and criminological research Discussing these topics from the view of green criminology sociology and governance this book will be of great interest to all those concerned about the transnational dimensions of crime and the environment Transnational Environmental Crime Rob White, 2018-10-08

This book provides a comprehensive introduction to and overview of eco global criminology Eco global criminology refers to a criminological approach that is informed by ecological considerations and by a critical analysis that is global in scale and perspective Based upon eco justice conceptions of harm it focuses on transgressions against environments non human species and humans At the centre of eco global criminology is analysis of transnational environmental crime This includes crimes related to pollution of air water and land and crimes against wildlife including illegal trade in ivory as well as live animals It also includes those harms that pose threats to the environment more generally such as global warming In addressing these issues the book deals with topics such as the conceptualization of environmental crime or harm the researching of transnational environmental harm climate change and social conflict threats to biodiversity toxic waste and the transference of harm prosecution and sentencing of environmental crimes and environmental victimization and transnational activism This book argues that analysis of transnational environmental crime needs to incorporate different notions of harm and that the overarching perspective of eco global criminology provides the framework for this Transnational Environmental Crime will be an essential resource for students academics policy makers environmental managers police magistrates and others with a general interest in environmental issues Revisiting the 'Ideal Victim' Marian

Duggan, 2018-07-04 Nils Christie s 1986 seminal work on the Ideal Victim is reproduced in full in this edited collection of vibrant and provocative essays that respond to and update the concept from a range of thematic positions Each chapter celebrates and commemorates his work by analysing evaluating and critiquing the current nature and impact of victim identity experience policy and practice The collection expands the focus and remit of victim studies addressing key themes around race gender faith ability and age while encompassing new and diverse issues Examples include sex workers as victims of hate crimes victims experiences of online fraud and recognising historic child sexual abuse victims in Ireland With contributions from an array of academics including Vicky Heap Sheffield Hallam University Hannah Mason Bish University of Sussex and Pamela Davies Northumbria University as well as a Foreword by David Scott The Open University this book evaluates the contemporary relevance and applicability of Christie s Ideal Victim concept and creates an important platform
