

Floodplain wetlands have been lost worldwide, such as this tidal floodplain of the Ganges River in Bangladesh that has mostly been converted to rice paddies and aquaculture. However, intact mangrove forest remains in the Sundarbans National Park, where it appears dark green in this Digital Globe satellite image.

River floodplains are often permanently inundated by dams constructed on low-gradient rivers, such as in this example showing the Funil reservoir on the Grande River in the State of Minas Gerais in Brazil, where the trees could not tolerate continuous flooding (photograph: Emma Rosi).

Many inland wetlands have been drained for agriculture, often requiring tile fields and drainage ditches; this photo from Michigan shows the installation of new drainage lines (photograph: Stephen Hamilton).

Invasive plants can strongly impact wetlands, such as this Great Lakes coastal wetland in Michigan that has become dominated by the Common Reed (Phragmites australis) (photograph: Todd Marsee).

Environmental Impact Assessment PADC Environmental Impact Assessment and Planning Unit, 2012-12-06 Brian D Clark PADC Environmental Impact Assessment and Planning Unit Project Director Events throughout the world substantiate the view that planning and decision making systems need a better integration of environmental economic and social considerations Many organizations are showing considerable interest in Environmental Impact Assessment EIA and its role in project planning and policy evaluation and as an aid to decision making Consequently it was decided to hold a NATO Advanced Study Institute on EIA for the following reasons First there is evidence of uncertainty particularly amongst many scientists and decision makers as to the nature scope and objectives of EIA Secondly there is much confusion over the objectives and utility of certain EIA methods Third there appears to be a gulf developing between decision makers and what they require from EIA and the ability of the scientist to provide information which is scientifically rigorous Finally there appears to be little concern as to the relationship between impact prediction and the actual consequences of a development activity suggesting that if EIA is not to become both politically and scientifically disreputable greater emphasis should be placed on prediction monitoring and post audit studies As will be seen from the contents of this volume the ASI attempted to address all of the above topics and indeed many more It was perhaps inevitable that the ASI raised more questions than were answered but this is indicative of the vigorous debate that is now taking place about the role and utility of EIA
