Environmental Education In The Community College:

A Model General Education Environmental Studies Program for the Community College Gerald (Jerry) David Waxman,1997 Data collected demonstrate that general environmental education has been largely ignored at the community college level in the state of California Evidence is presented that the community colleges educate the majority of California college students In an effort to develop a model for an effective general education program in environmental education the theoretical components of environmental literacy are presented These components include the dimensions of knowledge skills affect and behavior Some current theories relative to environmental education content and process are analyzed It is argued that appropriate content areas of knowledge include science the humanities and social science the current environmental situation and wisdom from the past A model for instruction in environmental values is provided and it is suggested that general environmental education would be enhanced by extending it across the curriculum It is further theorized that interdisciplinary education experiential education and the opportunity to apply theoretical knowledge are appropriate process avenues to learning A self correcting method of application that empowers students to take part in the remediation of campus and community environmental problems is presented Personal interviews with representatives of eleven colleges and universities reveal the natures of their environmental education problems and lend support for the theoretical content and process uncovered Further ways in which the campus and the community can be used to elevate experiential environmental education are reviewed the special problems associated with education at the community college level are discussed Finally a model for a complete coherent environmental studies program that is appropriate for general education at the community college level is provided This program includes sample interdisciplinary courses and an administrative structure that features the creation of a campus wide environmental learning academy that is responsible for the development presentation and administration of general environmental education programs for the campus and community

Johnson, Michael J. Mappin, 2005-03-03 Environmental education has often blurred the distinction between ecological science and environmental advocacy Growing public awareness of environmental problems and desire for action may be contributing to this blurring There is a need to clarify the distinction between the role of ecological science and the role of social and political values for the environment within environmental education This book addresses this need by examining the changing perspectives of ecology in education and the changing perspectives of education in environmental education Guidelines are provided for assessing the science and education perspectives within environmental education along with suggested frameworks for development of programs and resources that integrate current science education and action This book will be of interest to environmental educators ecologists interested in environmental education and curriculum and resource developers

Stevenson, Robert Stevenson, 2013 The environment and contested notions of sustainability are increasingly topics of public interest political debate and legislation across the world Environmental education journals now publish research from a wide variety of methodological traditions that show linkages between the environment health development and education The growth in scholarship makes this an opportune time to review and synthesize the knowledge base of the environmental education EE field The purpose of this 51 chapter handbook is not only to illuminate the most important concepts findings and theories that have been developed by EE research but also to critically examine the historical progression of the field its current debates and controversies what is still missing from the EE research agenda and where that agenda might be headed Published for the American Educational Research Association AERA

Environmental Attitudes of Community College Students Concerning Age, Gender, and Race Robert W. Fournier, 2022 Many studies have shown the mental physical and academic benefits of environmental education to students Equally important environmental education can develop our students into more environmentally minded citizens However we are learning that most students are not receiving accurate environmental information while in school which may impact their attitudes toward the environment and subsequent actions to protect it Understanding current college aged students Generation Z s attitudes toward the environment are critical as they are next in line to make political and business decisions that will affect our planet Using the New Ecological Paradigm Scale NEP 1 556 community college students were surveyed to determine their attitudes toward the environment This dissertation analyzed these secondary data to understand whether NEP scores vary by student age traditional non traditional gender male female and race White Hispanic Black Asian American Native American Data were also analyzed to determine if differences in attitudes exist among students enrolled in various science and non science courses If individual groups of students have lower NEP scores it will allow the school to adjust their curriculum to increase and improve environmental content delivered either as a standalone or in an interdisciplinary manner with other courses
