1. Model & Discuss

Have the students open their books to page 35 and study the cursive j in the blue tab at the top of the page.

Ask the students the following questions as they look at the model of the cursive j.

1. What is the last stroke called? (overcurve)
2. Where does this letter begin? (bottom line)
3. How many slant strokes are in this letter? (1)
4. Where does the last stroke end? (midline)
5. Is there an overcurve in this letter? (yes)

After you discuss the letter, have the students trace over the cursive j in their books as they say "undercurve, slant, curve back, overcurve, dot" to themselves.

2. Practice

On the first line, have the students start at the dots and trace and write the cursive j as they say "undercurve, slant, curve back, overcurve, dot" to themselves. Have them stop and evaluate their work as described in Step 3

Lowercase j

Objectives:

- Review the strokes in the cursive j.
- Trace and write the cursive j.
- Trace and write cursive j joinings and words.
- Write the cursive j in sentences.

Key Points: Pause after the undercurve, then slant. The overcurve ending crosses at the bottom line.

before going to the next line. On the second and third lines, have the students trace and write the cursive j directly below the letters on the previous line. Then, on the fourth line, have them write the cursive j.

3. Self-Evaluate After each line of practice, students circle their best letter and put an X on the one that needs the most improvement. Ask them what needs to be improved on the letter they put an X through.

Next, have the students trace and write the joinings and words. Then have them write the sentences.

Have the students carefully evaluate their handwriting.

Letter j Corrective Techniques See page T27.

Katherine's OT Tip Some students will continue to struggle with copying and independent writing skills despite your best adaptive strategies. They will appear to be bored and disinterested in any task that includes handwriting across their subject areas. It is important to consider that these students may be experiencing difficulties with the underlying skills that foster handwriting mastery. It would be wise to consult with the parents and an occupational therapist about possible additional needs.
