

The FBI draw is one continuous movement. Note in picture 1 that the finger does not rise.

I believe the long action of the Colt revolvers previously leads itself to fast-draw double-action work better than the more revolvers "short" action of the Smith & Wesson revolvers. However, the old long-action Smith & Wesson were the smoothest of all. Even though the actual lock time of the modern Smith & Wesson is less than that of the long-action guns, the trigger pull is too stiff, and overcoming inertia of the action at high speed is too time-consuming. The smoothness and effortlessness of firing the long-action revolvers are such that the only mechanical limitation to the speed of your draw is the speed with which you are able to pull the trigger.

If you are seriously interested in fast-draw work, regardless of the type of gun you are using, you will find that a few dollars spent in having your action boxed and all bearing surfaces polished will be a sound investment in a faster draw.

Either by the use of custom grips or grip adapters, you should alter the grip of your gun so that no matter how fast you grab your weapon you will come up with a good shooting grip. The two most common shooting errors in fast draw are: grabbing the revolver too high on the grip so that the wedging of your hand interferes with the action of the hammer, and gripping the butt so low that all accuracy is lost and pulling the trigger is almost an impossibility.

Your holster is of paramount importance in fast-draw work, and it should hold your gun in such a manner that it is in perfect alignment with

in direction of the motion used to bring it into firing position. The holster should be absolutely rigid with no side or up-and-down motion. There should be nothing in the construction of the holster to get in the way of your hand, straps, buckles, coaches, or decorations on the body of the holster cause slight hesitation as you clear your hand to. This should be true of any modern holster, either modern or western.

The holster should be snug and hold the gun rigidly in exactly the same position each time you draw. A holster that has been boxed on the inside or put a band with smooth, heavy top-grain cowhide is naturally faster. Putting up the inside of a holster with surfaces of vasoline, graphite, oil, grease or putty or putty gun results in nothing but a greasy, dirty gun.

All fast shooting should be done with either black cartridges when going upon an electronic timer, or wax bullets, when breaking balloons or using it on hard targets. When handling guns at extremely high speed, there is no margin for error. Since accidents do happen, it is only common sense to take precautions and protect yourself — and protect your hobby by sensible legislation.
