ABOUT

ANCIENT EGYPT

ALONG THE NILE

The Nile river was the lifeblood of the land, as they had to be irrigated. Farmers used a device called a shaduf. By using heavy stones to balance the water bucket, water could be lifted from the river.

Papyrus plants grew in marshy places along the river. Papyrus was made from papyrus. Boats made from bundles of papyrus lashed together were used for traveling up and down the river.

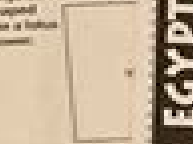

Hunting happens in the marshes was a dangerous sport. These huge beasts are fast-tongued and their bites can be fatal.

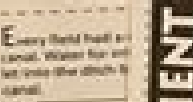

The simplest way to irrigate the grain fields was to use a long pole with a bucket at the end. The bucket was lowered into the water and then raised to pour the water into the field.

All kinds of people—Copts, Greeks, Romans, and others—lived in Egypt. They were all different, but they all lived in Egypt.

Every field had a canal. Water for the fields was brought from the Nile. The water was brought from the Nile to the fields.
