

Anna Hartzell

Fremont, Michigan

Frequently, neighbors dropped in to visit from Hartzell where she was quilting. She was known for her quilting and her wonderful coffee. One visit by a young woman named Milly Spleenauer and her aunt proved to be a most special occasion. Anna was working on her Autumn Leaves quilt on that day, and Milly was immediately taken by the beauty of it. It was the first quilt with hand stitching that she had ever seen.

The impression made on Milly that day inspired her to try quilting several years later. Today, she is also a quilt teacher and judge. In 1976, Milly was thrilled to have the opportunity to buy Autumn Leaves from a neighbor who used for them in her last years. "People seldom have a chance to own the first quilt they ever own," says Milly.

Autumn Leaves

1934-1935

The popularity of the Autumn Leaves pattern increased when it was sold at the Chicago World's Fair in 1933 as a quilt competition sponsored by Sears, Roebuck and Company. The pattern was quickly available commercially in the 1930s and 1940s, as no surprise that the particular quilt was made from a commercial pattern. Nevertheless, the pattern's simplicity and beauty have held the attention of quilters ever since.

Autumn trees and leaf placement can best be achieved by piecing all pieces in place before applying the traditional piecing technique as pattern as Anna Hartzell made the quilt in the 1930s. But any one of the contemporary piecing techniques is equally suitable.
