Grandmas War An Autobiography:

Grandma's War H. Jae Benoy, 2005-11 The rain of devastation falling from the skies on Pearl Harbor that fateful December 7 1941 was numbing then horrifying with the realization that Japan's attack along with Europe's war was now ours Rising up out of isolation our fighting men went to battle and those left behind rallied to work in shipyards airplane factories and defense plants rolling bandages collecting scrap buying stamps and bonds and praying We lived each day with the anxiety and fears that having a loved one in harm's way brings and we waited When the fighting stopped and the boys came marching home we joined in a concerted effort to bind up the wounds of war and get on with our lives until Korea and we were at war again 1953 saw its ending except for occupation WWII was not really over until 1955 when the occupation troops came home and the waiting was only for the missing in action The face of war has changed Weaponry uniforms and strategies have been transformed by a skyrocketing technology One thing has not changed Waiting for the loved ones in harm's way it is the same It will never change And so we wait with our yellow ribbons
