

The Contemporary World

International Financial Institutions and Economic Organizations

Market Integration

Economy became one of the social institutions that has the biggest impacts on society. It is a social institutions that organizes all production, consumption, and trade of goods in the society. Economic systems vary from one society to another. But any given economy, production typically splits into three sectors.

The primary sector extracts raw materials from natural environments. The secondary sector gains the raw materials and transforms them into manufactured goods. The tertiary sector involves services rather than goods. It offers services by doing things rather than making things.

International Financial Institutions

The following are the financial institutions and economic organizations that made countries even closer together, at least, when it comes to trade:

Bretton Wood System

Because of the fear of the recurrence of lack of cooperation among nation-states after WW I and II, political instability and economic turmoil, reduction of barriers to trade and free flow of money among nations became the focus to restructure the world economy and ensure global financial stability.

It has five elements:

1. The expression of currency in terms of gold or gold value to establish a par value.
2. The official monetary authority in each country (central bank or equivalent) would agree to exchange its own currency for those of other countries at the established exchange rates, plus or minus a one-percent margin.
3. The establishment of an overseer for these exchange rates; thus, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) was founded.
4. Eliminating restrictions on the currencies of member states in the international trade.
5. That the U.S. dollar became the global currency.

One of the systems born out of Bretton Woods was the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) that was established in 1947. GATT was a forum for the meeting of representatives from 23 member countries. It focused on trade goods through multinational trade agreements conducted in many "rounds" of negotiation. However, it was out of Uruguay Round (1986-1993) than agreement was reached to create the World Trade Organization (WTO).
