A

Abstract a) A summary of a piece of written work, or b) language that conveys ideas or general qualities of people or things. Abstract is the opposite of concrete, which conveys specific information about a particular person or thing. Abstract writing lacks vivid or precise detail, whereas concrete writing possesses specific detail.

Act The major division in a play or dramatic work. An act has one or more scenes.

Aestheticism (Aesthetic movement) Refers to a movement in late nineteenth-century Europe centered on a belief in "art for art's sake." Rooted in the ideas of Immanuel Kant, Baudelaire, Flaubert, Mallarmé, and others, aestheticism believed that art was not meant to serve a moral or didactic purpose; art's value was its beauty. The ideas of aestheticism came to England through writers such as Walter Pater and later influenced writers such as Wilde and Swinburne who were connected with the Decadence movement. For major writers and works in this area, see the Literary History Chart.

Aesthetics The study of beauty in both nature and art. Aesthetics addresses philosophical questions about the nature of beauty, psychological questions about the effects of beauty, and theoretical issues related to taste and perception of beauty.

Affective Fallacy A term first used by William K. Wimsatt and Monroe C. Beardsley for the practice of basing literary interpretation upon the response of readers or upon the emotional effect a particular work has on readers. Wimsatt and Beardsley believed affective fallacy to be flawed, as with another fallacy they coined, intentional fallacy, in which one evaluates a literary text according to its author's explicit or implicit intentions. These are major ideas within New Criticism. Reader Response criticism has also countered the notions of the affective and intentional fallacies.

Age of Sensibility (Age of Johnson) A period of British literature spanning the years 1744-1785, though 1789 and 1798 are alternate end dates. This period is sometimes referred to as the Age of Johnson because of Samuel Johnson's considerable influence upon literature. The characteristics of the Age of Johnson link this period with the end of the Neoclassical period, whereas the Age of Sensibility anticipates the Romantic period. In contrast to the Augustan era,
