Introduction to linguistics

This module is about how language is really used

"Study of the sociological aspects of language. Sociolinguists attempt to isolate the linguistic features used in particular situations that mark the various social relationships among the participants and the significant elements of the situation. Factors influencing the choice of sounds, grammatical elements, and vocabulary may include age, gender, education, ethnic identity, occupation, and peer-group identification." *Britannica Concise Encyclopedia*

- A traditional definition which concentrates on the linguistic features of a language – theoretical sociolinguistics. How are grammar, accent and lexis (features of speech) influenced by belonging to a group? This broadly belongs to variationist studies

Essay starting tip: dictionary definition or quote crystal

English marks by female marital status

- Male privilege
- English language is sexist
- Social marking

Rp is linked to class as it's the language of power

- Theoretical (variationist) sociolinguistics ^
- Applied (critical) sociolinguistics - taking it apart and seeing how it can be applied

The social and political implications within society (e.g. education and language planning)

Language is looked at as a tool of power i.e. it creates and maintains unequal relationships e.g. patient/doctor relationship

Tip: never say sorry to the police
