Campbell, 2023-05-31 Until recently historians tended to stress the perceived technological and ecological shortcomings of medieval agriculture The ten essays assembled in this volume offer a contrary view Based upon close documentary analysis of the demesne farms managed for and by lords they show that by 1300 in the most commercialized parts of England production decisions were based upon relative factor costs and commodity prices Moreover when and where economic conditions were ripe and environmental and institutional circumstances favourable medieval cultivators successfully secured high and ecologically sustainable levels of land productivity They achieved this by integrating crop and livestock production into the sort of manure intensive systems of mixed husbandry which later underpinned the more celebrated output growth of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries If medieval agriculture failed to fulfill the production potential provided by wider adoption of such systems this is more appropriately explained by the want of the kind of market incentives that might have justified investment innovation and specialization on the scale that characterized the so called agricultural revolution than either the lack of appropriate agricultural technology or the innate backwardness of medieval cultivators Money, Coins and Commerce Eddy Van Cauwenberghe, Eddy van Cauwenberghe, 1991 Historical Geography of England and Wales Robert A.
