Become Smarter Not a Martyr Deborah Kerr, Riz Virdee, 2021-04-30 We have found in our clinical practice that the victim mentality is truly a problem Most people enter counselling describing themselves in a stuck place unknowingly having fallen into the realms of a victim mind set Whether it is by being in difficult and tumultuous relationships or with a barrage of constant negative self judgements people unconsciously create complex layers of addictive patterns of behaviours

through self neglect substance abuse eating too much erratic spending loving too much or caring too much and even shaming and humiliating others and self Ultimately to survive you can unconsciously fool yourself into believing that you are dealing with it As people our main strategy is survival our default is to run away from feeling the emotional pain and instead if left untreated you create dysfunctional protective layers of behaviours and delude yourself into believing you feel better The addictive nature of rationalisation intellectualisation along with denial places a dent in your personal values that reinforces negative messages into your mind and which further embeds limiting beliefs about you your relationships and your reality Just as importantly this book is not targeted to any person who has suffered a real life event which has left them being a genuine victim of circumstance Any of us can fall victim to a real life event or become a victim of circumstance Being caught up in a predicament where we had no control over what happened and nothing we did or failed to do made things happen the way they did is deeply affecting and disturbing that can eventually be experienced as traumatic Being a survivor means to take action by moving through the ordeal the pain the grief and loss in a holistic approach encompassing the mind and body If not you can find yourself unknowingly moving into a Victim Life Position and further becoming accustomed to staying in denial trapped and engaging in self destructive coping behaviour If you do not heal through a mind heart coherence by embracing the unification of wisdom of mind and heart of compassion your victim mentality becomes programmed and embedded as your personality and eventually establishes into an identity where you can no longer recognise its origins You can end up beating yourself up and ruining valuable relationships You become a complainer and blamer and can forget ever having made a choice to live this way
