THE TABLET—No. XLVIII

The number of the Tables presents the following Specifications have been fixed to the European number:

"The Director of Agriculture, United States, under a public guarantee, will procure the Government of the United States."

FORMERLY, it was the policy of Great Britain to disseminate the idea, that the several colonies were too much divided by religion, manners and customs, by different interests, and perpetual secret animosities, to attempt and form a government of their own. It is not remarkable that Britain should cherish and diffuse an opinion so favorable to her power. And tho' we have reason to lament, we have cause to wonder at, the degree of success which attended her truly successful endeavors. The intercourse of the colonies with her was much greater than with any other. It is known that people are very susceptible of the opinion of their worth when they have dealings. Our dealings were with Britain almost exclusively, and we adopted many of her favorite doctrines with a docility and confidence which in fact, her conduct was calculated to inspire. The leading men, who gave a tone to the public sentiment in this country, were Britons, or colonists so intimately attached to Britain themselves to the connection with the mother country. There was an apparent utility in this course, which not only made it plausible, but filled every eye. Indeed the subject at this time would have had the effect of which should make a partner easier with heretofore. In every other respect, each has an interest in the prosperity of the whole. If rice and indigo produce wealth, the people and the taxable property are enriched. The consumption of desired articles increases. The New-England man is as much relieved and benefited as the one who sailed from his home country. The navigation and glory of the State will furnish the means of a more prompt recovery of the Eastern cities.

England and France are struck in trade as well as power, because each endeavors to supply the other in the sale of the like commodities. England would excel France in the silk manufacture. And France excels in the sale of the woolen and hard ware branches. Their vindictive regulations have, perhaps, mutually injured each other infinitely more than either has benefited herself. But what foundation is there for such a competition in America. Virginia raises tobacco. New-England never can become her competitor in that culture. The cereals and wheat are confined by nature to the more southern States. The culture of corn and rice is no rivalry. The cottoners will grow up to the market. For the human species will multiply in every country in proportion to the regular means of subsistence.

A man who should arrange to flow judiciously among the New England States, or between Pennsylvania and New Jersey, by alleging that they have paying currents, would certainly be laughed at. His friends would not be sufficiently stupid to
