Fiscal Incentives For Investment And Innovation:

Fiscal Incentives for Investment and Innovation Anwar Shah, 2006 Developing countries continue to make widespread use of tax policy instruments to promote industrial and technological development. The actual effect of these instruments on business activity and government revenues however remains an open question. The studies presented in this volume take an important first step in quantifying the effect of investment incentives on business decisions related to production and investment. In addition they suggest the consequences of such incentives for government revenues. The analyses presented in subsequent chapters attempt to answer a narrow set of questions. The most fundamental of these questions is Do taxes matter for investment. Related questions include What have been the investment stimulation direct and induced effects of tax policy measures per dollar of forgone revenues. Do taxes matter for foreign direct investment FDI in developing countries. Do they influence foreign business decisions about location. What are the implications of the home industrial country tax regime for the host developing country tax system. How do taxes interact with other institutional features of a developing country and what are the implications for the effectiveness of tax incentives. Are corporate taxes largely ineffective nonmarginal instruments because of the influence of other policy instruments. Do taxes matter for domestic investment. What is their effect on the structure of industrial production. What has been the effect of tax instruments on the employment of labor physical capital and research and development R D capital. What has been the effect of business taxes and tax expenditures forgone revenues on technological change expansion of private output and after tax profits. Are there tax induced distortions that prevent firms from holding optimal levels of fixed factors. How does market power affect tax incentives. What is the role of expectations in investment decisions. Given empirical estimates on factor substitution the nature of technical change and economies of scale what revenue neutral alternative tax policy environment would best encourage investment and enhance productivity and growth. The papers presented in this volume reflect on the above questions at both conceptual and empirical levels and in doing so pay close attention to the tax and nontax policy elements and the existing institutions market imperfections in developing and emerging market economies. In the next section the case for tax policy interventions in the marketplace is examined briefly.

The Welfare State, Public Investment, and Growth Hirofumi Shibata, Toshihiro Ihori, 2012-12-06 This book presents fifteen papers selected from the papers read at the 53rd Congress of the International Institute of Public Finance held at Kyoto Japan in August 1997. Although organized under the general title of Public Finance and Public Investment the Congress covered a wide range of topics in Public Finance. One of the highlights of the Congress was a historic and brilliant debate between two of the greatest living authorities in the area of public finance Professors James M Buchanan and Richard A Musgrave on the nature of the welfare state and its future. Part I of this book is concerned with this debate and its empirical counterpart James M Buchanan. Chapter 1 warns that the welfare state will be unsustainable unless it preserves generality or at least quasi generality in welfare programs The introduction of overt discrimination in welfare programs through means testing and targeting can only diminish public support He argues that a political version of the tragedy of commons will emerge if and when identifiable interest groups recognize the prospects of particularized gains as promised by discriminatory tax or transfer payments Faced with mounting pressure from entitlement like claims of special interest groups against public revenues on one hand and equally strong pressure against further tax burdens on the other political leaders are attracted to solutions that single out the most vulnerable targets Distributional disagreement among classes will then become a major source of political discourse and an impetus for class conflict

Incentives for Innovation in China Xuedong Ding, Jun Li, 2015-02-11 In the past three decades China has successfully transformed itself from an extremely poor economy to the world's second largest economy The country's phenomenal economic growth has been sustained primarily by its rapid and continuous industrialization Currently industry accounts for nearly two-fifths of China's gross domestic product and since 2009 China has been the world's largest exporter of manufactured products This book explores the question of how far this industrial growth has been the product of government policies It discusses how government policies and their priorities have developed and evolved examines how industrial policies are linked to policies in other areas such as trade technology and regional development and assesses how new policy initiatives are encouraging China's increasing success in new technology intensive industries It also demonstrates how China's industrial policies are linked to development of industrial clusters and regions OECD Science, Technology and Industry Outlook 2006 OECD,2006-12-04 The OECD Science Technology and Industry Outlook 2006 offers a comprehensive review of key trends in science technology and innovation policy and an examination of recent policy developments in OECD countries Fiscal Policy and Institutional Renovation in Support of Innovative Country Building Jia Kang,2020-12-06 Since the onset of the twelfth Five Year Plan China has been at the forefront as an innovative nation based on a carefully designed strategy Despite this it can be argued that the Chinese government requires a series of more effective and systematic fiscal and taxation policies This book analyses the status quo and possible optimization of China's fiscal and taxation policies By drawing comparisons with other countries as well as a practical investigation into the lessons China has drawn from elsewhere the author shows how a nation should make steadily growing and optimized financial investments in science and technology in order to foster the optimum environment for innovation It is shown that institutional innovation should be a systematic project which involves top level design and top down leadership This volume will be a useful reference for students scholars and policy makers who are interested in financial policy
