Farming And Birds:

Farming and Birds in Europe Deborah J. Pain, M. W. Pienkowski, 1997-01-01 In this unique book an international cast of authors highlight all aspects of the problems associated with farming and bird conservation Discussion ranges from the socio political pressures on farm policy to the effects of management on a variety of bird species throughout the more and less developed parts of the European Union Potential changes in the Common Agricultural Policy are considered in terms of how they have been and can be tailored to benefit birds and wildlife through such initiatives as the new Agri Environment Regulation Farming and Birds in Europe addresses the need for policy efforts to focus on both the concerns of conservation and sensible farm production in a timely manner An opportunity not to be missed is at hand and this book provides much of the importance in seeing that a sensible conclusion is reached both for the needs of the farmer and consumer and for the birds and wildlife of the European countryside Key Features Provides a detailed up to date account of n Common Agricultural Policy and Bird Conservation Important resource for aid in developing land use policy Includes an integrated approach to policy making

Farming and Birds Raymond J. O'Connor, Michael Shrubbs, 1990-03-22 This attractively illustrated book reviews the effects of agricultural development on bird populations in Britain Examining modern farmland as a bird habitat it explains the changes both in habitat structure and in available resources that have occurred as a result of mechanisation and use of agrochemicals Farmland bird communities are described and their composition related to farm structure and land use Based extensively on empirical data extracted from the British Trust for Ornithology's Common Bird Census and from nest histories recorded in the BTO's Nest Record Scheme the book presents an important analysis of the position of agricultural bird populations under modern farming systems Particular examination has been made of the impact of changing methods rotations and crops which have been underestimated in the past Resulting from the co operation between a professional ornithologist and a working cereal farmer this book provides an objective and informed view of the impact of British agriculture on bird populations

Birds Beneficial to Agriculture Frederick William Frohawk, 1919 Farming and Birds Ian Newton, 2017 Given the underlying topography the scenery over most of Britain has been created largely by human activities Over the centuries landscapes have been continually modified as human needs and desires have changed Each major change in land use has brought changes to the native plants and animals continually altering the distribution and abundance of species This is apparent from the changes in vegetation and animal populations that were documented in historical times but even more so in those that have occurred since the Second World War More than seventy per cent of Britain's land surface is currently used for crop or livestock production and in recent decades farming has experienced a major revolution Not only has it become more thoroughly mechanised it has also become heavily dependent on synthetic fertilisers and pesticides and increasingly large scale in its operation These changes have brought crop yields and livestock production to levels previously considered unattainable However such high yields have been achieved only at huge financial and environmental costs One of the most conspicuous and best documented consequences of modern agriculture has been a massive loss of wildlife including birds In this timely addition to the New Naturalist Library Ian Newton discusses the changes that have occurred in British agriculture over the past seventy years and the effects they have had on bird populations He explains how different farming procedures have affected birds and other wildlife and how an understanding of the processes involved could help in future conservation

Writing for researchers professionals and graduate students the authors summarize the collapse of populations of many farmland bird species in the 20th century one of the biggest conservation problems of the day They firstly set the historical context of change in agriculture and bird communities since the 18th century and introduce the bird communities of agricultural land today They then provide an overview of this very active area of applied conservation science including in depth case studies of 16 species that taken together illustrate the many ways that agricultural intensification has affected bird populations Moreover they show how this evidence base coupled with recent greening of agriculture policy has provided opportunities to manage agricultural land to better integrate the needs of food production and bird conservation They conclude by looking forward to challenges that the conservation of bird populations on agricultural land is likely to face
