Glioblastoma also known as glioblastoma multiforme is a malignant intrinsic tumor thought to arise from populations of stem progenitor cells in the brain It is the most common aggressive intrinsic brain tumor in adults with the potential to spread rapidly within the brain Patients with glioblastoma face a poor prognosis with median overall survival of approximately 15 months However our growing understanding of the molecular biology of gliomas means that this outlook may be improving The identification of clinically relevant subgroups defined by specific genetic mutations is challenging the traditional delineation between low and high grade gliomas that has been based on histological appearance and imaging Indeed it is becoming clear that as a molecular entity a glioblastoma which by traditional classification is a grade IV glioma may present with a lower grade initially and then become more aggressive an important addition to the established concept The care of a patient with a glioblastoma requires a coordinated approach delivered by a multidisciplinary team with the aim of maintaining quality of life for as long as possible Here we provide a concise overview of the diagnosis and management of glioblastoma as well as discussion of our emerging understanding of the molecular drivers that are helping us to delineate different patient subgroups These subgroups will hopefully allow more targeted treatments in the future This resource will be of interest to all those involved in caring for patients with this aggressive brain tumor including neurologists neurosurgeons neuro oncologists radiation oncologists palliative care specialists specialist nurses and medical students Contents
