The Mushroom at the End of the World Anna Lowenhaupt Tsing, 2017-09-19 What a rare mushroom can teach us about sustaining life on a fragile planet Matsutake is the most valuable mushroom in the world and a weed that grows in human disturbed forests across the northern hemisphere Through its ability to nurture trees matsutake helps forests to grow in daunting places It is also an edible delicacy in Japan where it sometimes commands astronomical prices In all its contradictions matsutake offers insights into areas far beyond just mushrooms and addresses a crucial question what manages to live in the ruins we have made A tale of diversity within our damaged landscapes The Mushroom at the End of the World follows one of the strangest commodity chains of our times to explore the unexpected corners of capitalism Here we witness the varied and peculiar worlds of matsutake commerce the worlds of Japanese gourmets capitalist traders Hmong jungle fighters industrial forests Yi Chinese goat herders Finnish nature guides and more These companions also lead us into fungal ecologies and forest histories to better understand the promise of cohabitation in a time of massive human destruction By investigating one of the world s most sought after fungi The Mushroom at the End of the World presents an original examination into the relation between capitalist destruction and collaborative survival within multispecies landscapes the prerequisite for continuing life on earth

Restoration and History Marcus Hall, 2010-02-01 Once a forest has been destroyed should one plant a new forest to emulate the old or else plant designer forests to satisfy our immediate needs Should we aim to re create forests or simply create them How does the past shed light on our environmental efforts and how does the present influence our environmental goals Can we predict the future of restoration This book explores how a consideration of time and history can improve the practice of restoration There is a past of restoration as well as past assumptions about restoration and such assumptions have political and social implications Governments around the world are willing to spend billions on restoration projects in the Everglades along the Rhine River in the South China Sea without acknowledging that former generations have already wrestled with repairing damaged ecosystems that there have been many kinds of former ecosystems and that there are many former ways of understanding such systems This book aims to put the dimension of time back into our understanding of environmental efforts Historic ecosystems can serve as models for our restorative efforts if we can just describe such ecosystems What conditions should be brought back and do such conditions represent new natures or better pasts A collective answer is given in these pages and it is not a unified answer

Assessment of Biodiversity for Improved Forest Planning Peter Bachmann, Michael Köhl, Risto Päävinen, 2013-04-17 The Global Biodiversity Strategy signed in 1992 in Rio de Janeiro and the resolutions at the Ministerial Conferences on the Protection of Forests in Europe in Strasbourg 1990 and Helsinki 1993 commit the signatory states to monitor nationally the state of biodiversity and to sustain the characteristic natural variation in the country Sustainability and long term planning are the two terms best describing the philosophy of traditional forest management practices However the traditional planning techniques are not primarily developed to maintain sustainability of biodiversity The gap between the international commitments and the practices in forest assessment and management is obvious This publication presents experience in methodology for assessing and monitoring the variation of ecosystems and habitats in relation to biodiversity conservation and for integrating biodiversity in regional planning of forest management and land use The state of the art in the field of natural resource assessments with special reference to forest biodiversity is reviewed progress in integrating data on biodiversity in forest management planning is presented and the information needs regarding biodiversity conservation and the question to what degree assessment methods for forest biodiversity can be simplified for practical applications are discussed The book is intended for researchers and practitioners in the field of forest and environmental planning and environmental policies

Towards Sustainable Management of the Boreal Forest Philip Joseph Burton, 2003 Presenting a summary of the development in boreal forest management this book provides a progressive vision for some of the world's northern forests It includes a selection of chapters based on the research conducted by the Sustainable Forest Management Network across Canada It includes a number of case histories

Climate Change and Globalization in the Arctic Eva Carina Helena Keskitalo, 2012 Climate change vulnerability assessment is a rapidly developing field However despite the fact that such major trends as globalization and the changing characteristics of the political and economic governance systems are crucial in shaping a community's capacity to adapt to climate change these trends are seldom included in assessments This book addresses this shortcoming

by developing a framework for qualitative vulnerability assessment in multiple impact studies of climate change and globalization and applying this framework to several cases of renewable natural resource use The book draws upon case studies of forestry and fishing two of the largest sectors that rely on renewable natural resources and reindeer herding in the European North The study represents a bottom up view originating with the stakeholders themselves of the degree to which stakeholders find adaptation to climate change possible and how they evaluate it in relation to their other concerns notably economic and political ones Moreover the approach and research results include features that could be broadly generalized to other geographic areas or sectors characterized by renewable natural resource use

Uncovering the Unconscious Dimensions of Planning Professor Frank Othengrafen, 2012-12-28 If planning is understood to be about the nature of place about the way in which we use land and about the physical expression of the ordering of society then it becomes apparent that planning as an activity cannot possibly be divorced from the general cultural traditions that inform it By adopting theoretical approaches from the fields of management studies cultural studies and anthropology and by using culture as an organising principle this book develops an innovative framework which provides better insights into what culture is about what the relations are between culture and planning and how culture influences planning practices It introduces a culturised planning model consisting of the analytical dimensions planning artefacts planning environment and societal environment with which to discover the unconscious routines and assumptions emotions and meanings attached to planning systems and the different concepts used in spatial planning systematically The model offers the possibility of uncovering cultural phenomena in spatial planning by providing relevant cultural dimensions and potential specifications and indicators which has not been the case so far By comparing examples of German Finnish and Greek planning habits the book illustrates cultural influence in planning and provides the readership with a feedback between the micro experiences of planners and the macro level institutional and social context as well as a more systematic comparison based on cultural values attitudes norms and rules

Greenhouse Gas Emissions - Fluxes and Processes A. Tremblay, Louis Varfalvy, Charlotte Roehm, Michelle Garneau, 2011-04-30 In a time when an unquestionable link between anthropogenic emissions of greenhouse gases and climatic changes has finally been acknowledged and widely documented through IPCC reports the need for precise estimates of greenhouse gas GHG production rates and emissions from natural as well as managed ecosystems has risen to a critical level Future agreements between nations concerning the reduction of their GHG emissions will pend upon precise estimates of the present level of these emissions in both natural and managed terrestrial and aquatic environments From this viewpoint the present volume should prove to a benchmark contribution because it provides very carefully assessed values for GHG emissions or exchanges between critical climatic zones in aquatic environments and the atmosphere It also provides unique information on the biases of different measurement methods that may account for some of the contradictory results that have been published recently in the literature on this subject Not only has a large array of current measurement methods been tested concurrently here but a few new approaches have also been developed notably laser measurements of atmospheric CO concentration 2 gradients Another highly useful feature of this book is the addition of monitoring and process studies as well as modeling
