New Research Reveals How to Recognize Your Donors Based on Demographics: Part II

BY KRISTEN SCHULTZ JAARDA

Who are your donors? What do they look like? If they are interested in life income plans, are they looking for income for themselves or for others? What are the average ages for the top gift plans? What is your donors' capacity to give? How does donor location impact giving?

This article is the second in a two-part series revealing the most common characteristics of planned and major gift donors and giving based on data from Crescendo's software and the GiftLegacy marketing service. If you are trying to reach your best donors and close more gifts, you should focus on these donor profiles.

Top Gifts by Age

At what ages are planned gifts completed and when should you begin marketing them to your top donors? Cloud software data offers answers to the average donor age for the most common planned gifts. See Table 1.

10 Essential Questions for Gift Planning

BY STEPHANIE C. BUCKLEY

When working with complex assets and gift structures, as we often do in planned giving, asking the right questions can be very important to help you quickly determine which gift strategy might work best for the donor, charity, and the asset being gifted. In my planned giving work, I found the following 10 questions essential to my gift evaluation, strategy, and recommendation. Some of these questions I asked the donor and some I ask myself as I am contemplating gift strategies. These questions are not listed in any order.

1. What size gift is the donor considering?

This is a key question to ask early on because in many cases it will determine the charitable options available. For example, if a donor is contemplating a $25,000 gift with a
