

Lead Singer¹

For Male or Female Voice

INTRODUCTION

You want to be a lead singer...so now what?

Sure, you've been singing since before you could tie your shoes, but now you want to turn those vocalizations into real results. Maybe you want to form a band, explore a new career, or just sound better in the shower. Won't your friends and family be impressed when you can really sing and read music? Yes, that's right — we're going to teach you to read music!

In just a few weeks, we'll have you reading and crooning some very well-known tunes, as well as some warmups and practice techniques. By the end of this book, you'll be ready to sing with a band and sing the hits.

All we ask is that you observe the three Ps: patience, practice and pace yourself.

Don't try to bite off more than you can chew, and DON'T skip ahead. If you're tired, take the day off and give your voice a break. If you get frustrated, put down the book and come back later. If you forget something, go back and learn it again. If you're having a great time, forget about dinner and keep on singing. Most importantly, have fun!

ABOUT THE AUDIO

We're glad you noticed the added bonus—audio! Each music example in the book is included on the audio, so you can hear how it sounds and sing along when you're ready. Take a listen whenever you see this symbol:

Each audio example is preceded by one measure of "clicks" to indicate the tempo and meter. For some examples, both a male and female version are recorded. Pan right to hear the singer's part only. Pan left to hear the accompaniment only. As you become more confident, try singing your part along with the rest of the band.
