Korean Film Eunjun Min,Jinsook Joo,Han Ju Kwak,2003-04-30 Despite its rise in the global market recent political progress and a surging interest worldwide Korean films are relatively unknown and rarely studied This new work begins by investigating the history industry structure and trends of filmmaking in Korea going on to examine how Hollywood films have affected both Korean mainstream and nonmainstream film industries in terms of both means of production and narrative Moreover the authors analyze the ways in which Korean films of recent years have represented the modernization process in Korea itself as well as the ideological implications that arise from the cinematic constructions of Korean imagination More than a mere chronological account of Korean cinematic history IKorean Film R attempts to consider the films as a popular cultural form that have a life beyond their theatrical runs stars genres and key movies become part of any culture s identity and in their narratives and meanings can be located evidence of the ways in which a culture makes sense of itself Korea has never before been given such an extensive treatment of this central idea and here for the first time the nation s culture and cinema are merged into one discussion that both reflects and shapes our understanding of it Guyana, 1838-1985 Steve

Garner,2007 This book traces the creation of ethnic groups in nineteenth century Guyana and its ultimate impact on the colony s political constituencies as it moved to independence The construction of the nation in the postcolonial period is approached through an analysis of cricket trade unions and women traders in the late 1970s and early 1980s The author argues that ethnicity as a historical relationship can be understood as a social experience if it is viewed as part of a set of overlapping identities which include class and gender It also contends that ethnicity in Guyana was created in colonial times and deployed as a tool for dominance which has reconfigured itself to function effectively in postcolonial times
