The Functional Communication Therapy Planner is a reliable and valid tool that helps the speech-language clinician to assess the communication needs of clients with aphasia, plan and prioritise therapy goals, and ensure that therapy is meaningful and customised to the specific needs of the client. It also allows the clinician to evaluate the effectiveness of therapy through comparison of pre- and post-treatment performance of the client's communicative functions.

The FCTP is designed in five structured steps that guide the clinician in clinical decision making from initial information gathering to post-treatment evaluation. In Step 1 of the planner, the clinician identifies the communicative needs of the client. This is achieved by the completion of a questionnaire and an interview with the client and their caregiver. Step 2 sees the clinician and the client working collaboratively to discuss and prioritise these functional communication goals in terms of relevance and importance to the client. To facilitate goal prioritisation, Worrall highlights the consideration of three factors, that is, importance, impact, and achievability. Here, it would have been invaluable if more information was provided about the interview rating (i.e., the distinction between +, ++, +++, and blank entry) and in supporting the clinician in making decisions about goal prioritisation, particularly in situations where clients (or caregivers) are unable to assist.

Once communicative goals have been ascertained, the clinician performs a pre-treatment evaluation (Step 3) to measure the client's current performance in each of the activities associated with his or her goals. Observation of the client in real-life or simulated communicative acts is encouraged, as this helps the clinician attain a clearer indication of the skills that require specific intervention. It also facilitates the collection of baseline measurements for consideration of treatment efficacy. Worrall provides specific instructions and examples to guide the clinician in the evaluation process, including the use of a multidimensional rating scale to assess skill adequacy for each communicative activity selected for intervention.

Treatment is commenced in Step 4 of the planner. The completed Profile of Functional Communication Skills gives both clinician and client a clearer perspective of the areas targeted for therapy. Specific information about functional communication therapy is not included, but Worrall does provide references for additional reading. Following intervention, the client's communicative adequacy is re-evaluated to determine goal achievement and skill improvement (Step 5). Clinician and client complete a second Profile of Functional Communication Skills, and comparisons are made between both profiles. As the FCTP is designed to be cyclical in nature, new goals can be re-established and further intervention can be provided to the client in order to achieve his or her communicative goals.

Worrall can be commended for her concise and structured presentation of the therapy planner. Aims and instructions are explicit, and the inclusion of the
