It is important that the setting, program and interventions are designed to meet students' unique performance characteristics (e.g., physical characteristics, motor skills, cognitive, academic, and organizational skills, etc.) and to be representative of the real-world program. Individualized training for 2 months prior to the competition.

Participatory management is closely related with, and often is synonymous with, decentralization in providing knowledge-intensive services. In the context of the above, the following points may be of relevance. Strategically, different policy positions and institutional arrangements are all required that facilitate rapid learning and adaptation with local knowledge groups. The process of development is different in comparison to the one that is usually associated with the top-down approach. The latter will often involve a more or less gradual transfer of knowledge from government organizations to the private sector. In contrast, the latter is usually characterized by a more or less direct transfer of knowledge from government to the private sector. The latter is usually characterized by a more or less direct transfer of knowledge from government to the private sector.

• It is always essential to agree on a project's overall purpose before implementation. Some clients or management committees, particularly universities, may have an unclear or conflicting purpose for projects and this may be the main obstacle to achieving successful outcomes and preventing full-scale disaster. Agree the objectives and scope of the project before the project's implementation. Agree the overall purpose of the project and the role of the project manager. The project manager should be able to explain the project's purpose and the role of the project manager. The project manager should be able to explain the project's purpose and the role of the project manager.
