Qualls, 2019-06-21 The majority of carbon stored in the soils of the world is stored in forests The refractory nature of some portions of forest soil organic matter also provides the slow gradual release of organic nitrogen and phosphorus to sustain long term forest productivity Contemporary and future disturbances such as climatic warming deforestation short rotation silviculture the invasion of exotic species and fire all place strains on the integrity of this homeostatic system of C N and P cycling On the other hand the CO<sub>2</sub> fertilization effect may partially offset losses of soil organic matter but many have questioned the ability of N and P stocks to sustain the CO<sub>2</sub> fertilization effect Despite many advances in the understanding of C N and P cycling in forest soils many questions remain For example no complete inventory of the myriad structural formulae of soil organic N and P has ever been made The factors that cause the resistance of soil organic matter to mineralization are still hotly debated Is it possible to engineer forest soil organic matter so that it sequesters even more C The role of microbial species diversity in forest C N and P cycling is poorly understood The difficulty in measuring the contribution of roots to soil organic C N and P makes its contribution uncertain Finally global differences in climate soils and species make the extrapolation of any one important study difficult to extrapolate to forest soils worldwide
