

quinoa

Quinoa is a nutritional all-star that belongs in your weight loss plan. This whole grain has 8 grams of hunger-busting protein and 5 grams of fiber in one cup, plus it's as easy to cook as rice. It's also packed with nutrients such as iron, zinc, selenium, and vitamin E.

green tea

Several studies suggest green tea may promote weight loss by stimulating the body to burn abdominal fat. Green tea contains catechins, a type of phytochemical that may briefly affect the metabolism. To get the most benefit, you may need to drink green tea several times a day.

pears & apples

Pears and apples are also high in water content. Eat them with the peels for extra fiber, which will keep you full longer. Whole fruits are better than fruit juice. Not only do you get more fiber, you have to chew the fruits. This takes longer and requires some exertion.

sweet potatoes

Think of the typical toppings on your baked potato, -- butter, sour cream, maybe cheese and bacon bits. If you substitute a sweet potato, you might not need any of that. Baked sweet potatoes are so filling, they require very little embellishment. They can save you loads of calories. As a bonus, sweet potatoes are packed with potassium, beta carotene, vitamin C, and fiber.

vegetables

Vegetables are a great source for low-calorie foods that help satisfy you and make you feel full. Veggies contain fiber, vitamins and nutrients that help keep us healthy. Certain vegetables also are great metabolism booster foods such as Broccoli and Spinach. Spinach contains magnesium which has been known to boost the body's fat burning process. Spinach is also high in potassium which aids weight loss by keeping the body's cells hydrated. If your cells are not sufficiently hydrated, your metabolism will slow.

One of the best sources of protein is fish. Studies show it's more satisfying than chicken or beef, probably because of the type of protein it contains. Most fish is low in fat, and the exceptions usually have a healthy form of fat -- omega-3 fatty acids. Omega-3's, which are found in salmon, herring, and other fatty fish, appear to help protect against heart disease and other chronic conditions.

skim milk

Skim milk provides plenty of protein and calcium with none of the fat found in whole milk. And even though it's fat-free, skim milk can help you feel full. It takes longer to leave the stomach than drinks with less protein. There's also evidence that skim milk and other nonfat dairy foods may promote weight loss, particularly around the mid-section.

Studies suggest cinnamon may have a stabilizing effect on blood sugar levels. Nearly everyone can benefit from cinnamon in its traditional role. Stir some into your coffee, tea, or yogurt to add sweetness without adding calories.

grapefruit

While grapefruit doesn't have any magical fat-burning properties, it can help dieters feel full with fewer calories. This is because of the plentiful amounts of soluble fiber, which take longer to digest.

berries

Like other fruits, berries are high in water and fiber, which can keep you full longer. But they have another benefit -- they're very sweet. This means berries can satisfy your sweet tooth for a fraction of the calories you would take in gobbling cookies or brownies. Blueberries stand out because they're easy to find and loaded with antioxidants.

coffee

It sounds too good to be true -- one of your favorite beverages may actually help rev the metabolism and help you lose weight. But be cautious: the effect is small and is easily cancelled out by the extra calories in a mocha cappuccino.

oatmeal

Oatmeal has three things going for it: fiber-rich whole-grain oats, lots of water, and it's hot. This is a very filling combination. Hot food takes longer to eat, and all that liquid and fiber will help you feel full longer. Don't buy the one that's already sweetened; you can choose how to flavor it.

lean meat

As we've seen, protein can keep you full longer and burn more calories during digestion. But you want to choose your protein carefully. Dark meat tends to be high in fat, which could cancel out some of the benefits. Skinless chicken and turkey breast is a great choice.

soup

Soup -- we're talking broth-based, not creamy -- is a dieter's friend in several ways. It's full of water, which fills you up with the fewest possible calories. It's hot, which prevents you from guzzling it down too quickly. When eaten before a meal, soup can take up space that might have gone to higher-calorie foods.

air-popped popcorn

Three cups of plain, air-popped popcorn may seem like a whole lot, but the calorie content is low. All that air adds volume without adding fat or sugar.
