Y. Miranda^{1*}

ABSTRACT

Children of Alcohol Dependent fathers are at biological and environmental risk for a variety of social, emotional, and behavioural problems. The adversities that a child goes through is often not easy especially when there is always a sense of uncertainty prevailing in the home environment. When children spend their early years in a less stimulating in the form of emotional or if there is lack of physically supportive environment, brain development gets affected and later in life, these children have difficulty dealing with complex situations and environments making them more vulnerable to developmental psychopathology. Materials and Methods: A sample of 200 was collected being divided into two groups with one group consisting 100 sample of mother or caregiver of children whose father has been diagnosed with Alcohol Use Disorder(AUD) attending the outpatient and inpatient department of Psychiatry, Regional Institute of Medical Sciences. The other group consisting of 100 was of children whose father's did not had any kind of Substance Dependence. Socio Demographic details Performa and Developmental Psychopathology Check List was being administered. Statistical analysis in the form of Chi- square test, independent t-test of correlation was carried out to examine the relationship of various variables. Results: Among the children whose father's has AUD indicates that Emotional Disorders has the highest rate of high risk symptoms (35%) followed by Attention Deficient Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD) with 23% and Conduct Disorder (CD) with 13%. The comparative study between the two group indicated significant difference with regard to ADHD (p-value=0.003), CD (p-value=0.000) and Emotional Disorder (p-value=0.001). Conclusion: The findings have established that ADHD and Conduct disorders which are a part of externalising behaviours were observed to be at high risk among children of AUD father similarly, internalising behaviour which primarily includes emotional disorders was predominant.

Developmental Psychopathology is at once a perspective on the origins of mental disorders that begin during childhood and adolescence, a multidisciplinary approach linking normative development to psychopathology, and a scientific discipline closely tied to clinical child/adolescent psychology and psychiatry but transcending the usual diagnosis-based emphasis of these fields. Developmental psychopathology is described as 'the study of origins

The Developmental Psychopathology of

Eating Disorders Linda Smolak, Michael P. Levine, Ruth Striegel-Moore, 1996 Although eating problems ranging from body dissatisfaction and dieting to anorexia nervosa or bulimia nervosa can begin and typically have their roots in childhood theory and research in developmental psychopathology and developmental psychology have not received substantial attention in eating disorders research This book provides crucial background material from both fields and then makes direct applications to numerous aspects of the field of eating disorders including theory research treatment and primary prevention This book was born out of a transaction between frustration and optimism The frustrations reflected the limitations of current knowledge about eating problems and disorders Etiological causes which are sensitive and specific to eating disorders have been elusive Although there is some understanding of risk factors little is known about protective factors This has made prevention among other things difficult Furthermore the mechanisms underlying the association between risk factors and disordered eating are poorly understood For example it is known that women are at greater risk than men are but clinicians are hard pressed to get beyond gender based speculations and demonstrate why this is true The optimism grows from familiarity with the field of developmental psychopathology It seems evident that this approach has much to offer the field of eating disorders This book is an early step in the integration of developmental psychopathology into theorizing research treatment and prevention of eating disorders It addresses four specific goals to introduce the principles and methodologies of developmental psychopathology to review the work of developmental psychologists in several major areas of behavior relevant to understanding the causes treatment and prevention of eating disorders to apply developmental psychopathology principles to the area of eating disorders both in the form of theoretical models and in specific areas issues raised by developmental psychopathology and to discuss the implications of developmental approaches for prevention programs and treatments
