Nowadays we cannot even imagine a world where agriculture doesn't exist. So what did our ancestors do before the first seeds of agriculture were sown? They relied on nature to obtain sustenance. For the majority of human history we survived only due to hunting and gathering. That said, fire wasn't always available and meat couldn't be obtained all the time. In such instances the only means of survival for our ancestors was to gather natural foods. They used natural foods found in the wild to nourish their bodies and to heal themselves too. They did all this through foraging. Foraging is used as a form of sustenance only by a few societies these days. However the act of forging itself is neither lost nor unsatisfying. Even in modern society and the concrete jungle most of us live in foraging is still possible. From herbs and edible flowers to mushrooms plants and other natural elements there's plenty available from nature. All you need to do is look. Foraging has several benefits. It's not only a relaxing activity but it's a means to unplug from the hectic lifestyles most of us lead these days. It's also a great way to bond with your family and teach young ones about nature. Apart from that foraging helps build a better relationship with nature.
