Public School Choice Levon Barseghyan,Damon Clark,Stephen Coate,National Bureau of Economic Research,2014 Public school choice programs give households a free choice of public school and provide schools incentives to compete for students Proponents of these programs argue that by the usual market logic choice and competition will improve the quality of the education that schools provide Critics counter that the usual market logic does not translate easily to schools since households perceptions of school

quality depend not only on the efforts of school personnel but also on the composition of the student body i.e households have peer preferences This paper advances this debate by developing and analyzing an economic model of public school choice To capture the pro choice argument the model assumes that a neighborhood enrollment policy that provides schools with no incentives to exert effort is replaced by a prototypical public school choice policy in which households have a free choice of school and schools have incentives to compete for students To capture the anti choice argument the model assumes that households have peer preferences The analysis of the equilibrium of this model generates three findings that highlight potential limitations of choice programs

School Choice and School Productivity (or Could School Choice be a Tide that Lifts All Boats?), 2002 A school that is more productive is one that produces higher achievement in its pupils for each dollar it spends In this paper I comprehensively review how school choice might affect productivity I begin by describing the importance of school productivity then explain the economic logic that suggests that choice will affect productivity and finish by presenting much of the available evidence on school choice and school productivity The most intriguing evidence comes from three important recent choice reforms vouchers in Milwaukee charter schools in Michigan and charter schools in Arizona I show that public school students achievement rose significantly and rapidly in response to competition under each of the three reforms Public school spending was unaffected so the productivity of public schools rose dramatically in the case in Milwaukee School Choices John Merrifield, 2002-09-01 The school choice movement has gained political momentum in recent years with programs having been established in Milwaukee Florida Texas and elsewhere But today s programs are nothing like the free market in education proposed four decades ago by the early proponents of school choice Economist John Merrifield shows that the school choice movement has become mired in false alternatives petty distinctions and diminished vision Yet he argues that programs providing real educational choices must not be allowed to fail like so many government programs a freely competitive market for education must remain the ultimate goal School Choices True and False charts a course for the achievement of this goal Handbook of the Economics of Education Eric A. desperately need an Open Education Industry It clearly defines the term and the confusion about what can should be done to improve schooling outcomes and why over 30 years of efforts to improve schooling outcomes has left all 51 US school systems far short of what is needed to engage all schoolchildren in high value instruction Because of past education failures especially poor basic literacy in economic systems many influential academics and activists have asserted the presence of adequate market forces where key elements of high performing markets are absent and have become pre occupied with discussion of and development of devastating inappropriate generalizations about findings from studies of narrowly targeted restriction laden expansions of access to alternatives to traditional public schools The book compares those to transformational school choice expansions and describes key steps towards the inertia that threatens the future or America as a prosperous and free republic The Economic Perspective on Daily Choices Pasquale De Marco,2025-07-10 The
