Effects of Wheel Load Spatial Repeatability on Road Damage: a Literature Review Nezhir Mrad, Moustafa El-Gindy, William Kenis, Federal Highway Administration. Office of Engineering Research and Development, United States. Department of Transportation, United States. Federal Highway Administration, 1998

Effects of Wheel-load Spatial Repeatability on Road Damage Nezhir Mrad, 1998 The objective of this report is to conduct a review of the present and previously developed work devoted to the study of vehicle road interaction In particular two of the most pressing questions that are to be answered in the area of heavy vehicle generated road damage deal with the spatial repeatability of dynamic wheel loads produced by heavy road vehicles due to different types of suspension systems and the use of wide base and dual tires The outcome of this review which is a part of the Federal Highway Administration Truck Pavement Interaction research program on truck size and weight plays a determining role in assessing heavy truck suspension systems tire configurations and their contribution to pavement damage

Tegegn, University College, Dublin. School of Architecture, Landscape & Civil Engineering, 2007      Evaluating the impact of vehicle overloading on the structural layers of road pavement Abinet Gidey, 2024-02-15 Master's Thesis from the year 2023 in the subject Engineering Civil Engineering grade 3 96 4 Mekelle University Ethiopian Institute of Technology Mekelle course Road and Transportation Engineering language English abstract Many researchers agree that the contribution of vehicle overloading in the degradation of road pavement over the environment and the aging of materials is significantly larger. As such, the thesis emphasized overloading vehicles which is considered a major factor responsible for most pavement damage worldwide. The thesis aimed to evaluate the effect of overloading on pavement layer deterioration and its effect on the life of the asset and the economic loss induced due to overloading. The input data for analysis were collected as a secondary source. Moreover, KENLAYER part of the KENPAVE Computer Program was applied for the pavement layers nonlinear analysis and critical responses. The damage ratio indicating premature failure of the road is then determined from these critical responses and the actual reduction in service life of the road segment in years was determined. An economic evaluation criterion, the net present value, was used to determine the economic loss for two scenarios with and without overloading for the road investment. The road segment under study was designed for a traffic of 1 651 10 6 ESAL. On the other side, from the actual traffic and axle load data analysis results, the actual on-road traffic was 3 02 10 6. Thus, the overloaded truck traffic has created an extra load on the road pavement. As a result, pavement structures were damaged in an unexpected situation. The critical response results revealed that the tensile strain at the bottom of the asphalt layer and compressive strain at the top of the subgrade increased with increasing axle loads. Damage analysis was performed based on the Ethiopian Road Authority failure criterion; the permanent deformation on the top of the subgrade was the governing factor for the single axle with a single axle. In addition, the fatigue cracking on the bottom of the asphalt layer was the governing condition for single axles with dual wheels tandem and tridem axles      The Effect of Reduced Tire Inflation Pressures on Road Damage A.
