from Arabic into Latin in the twelfth century with an attribution to Aristotle. Considering this Neoplatonic text a product of Aristotle's school and even the completion of Aristotle's Metaphysics, Albert the Great concluded his series of Aristotelian paraphrases by commenting on it. To do so was to invite controversy since accidents of translation had made many readers think that the Liber de causis taught that God made only the first creature which in turn created the diverse multitude of lesser things. Thus Albert's contemporaries in the Christian West took the text to uphold the supposedly Aristotelian doctrine that from the One only one thing can emanate, a doctrine they rejected believing as they did that God freely determined the number and kinds of creatures. Albert however defended the philosophers against the theologians of his day denying that the thesis from the One only one proceeds removed God's causality from the diversity and multiplicity of our world. This Albert did by appealing to a greater theologian, Pseudo-Dionysius the Areopagite, and equating the being that is the subject of metaphysics with the procession of Being from God's intellect, a procession Dionysius described in On the Divine Names. Creation as Emanation examines Albert's reading of the Liber de causis with an eye toward two questions: First, how does Albert view the relation between faith and reason so that he can identify creation from nothing with emanation from God? And second, how does he understand Platonism and Aristotelianism so that he can avoid the misreadings of his fellow theologians by finding in a late fifth-century Neoplatonist the key to Aristotle's meaning? Fishery Bulletin, 1981
