Fathers and Their Children in the First Three Years of Life Frank L'Engle Williams, 2020-01-27 How ancient is father care of human infants and young children and why did it emerge Is it possible that father care arose among the ancestors of modern humans and became essential for survival Or is it a recent though variable development Is father care an evolved trait of Homo sapiens or is it a learned cultural behavior transmitted across generations in some societies but not others In this important study Frank L. Engle Williams examines the anthropological record for evidence of the social behaviors associated with paternity suggesting that ample evidence exists for the importance of such behaviors for infant survival Focusing on the first three postnatal years he considers the implications of father care both in the fossil record and in more recent cross cultural research for the development of such distinctively human traits as bipedalism extensive brain growth language and socialization He also reviews the rituals by which many human societies construct and reinforce the meanings of socially recognized fatherhood Father care was adaptive within the context of the parental pair bond and shaped how infants developed socially and biologically The initial imprinting of socially recognized fathers during the first few postnatal years may have sustained culturally sanctioned indirect care such as provisioning and protection of dependents for nearly two decades thereafter In modern humans this three year window is critical to father child bonding By increasing the survival of children in the past present and quite possibly the future father care may be a driving force in the biological and cultural evolution of Homo sapiens
