

Unlike traditional science programs, Science Interactions stresses the interconnectedness of the sciences and the multifaceted connections between science and other disciplines, such as art, literature and history. Most important, it reflects a careful sequencing of content from all four science disciplines—chemistry, physics, biology and earth science—over a three-year period. Unifying science themes, such as energy and stability and change, help connect the major ideas presented throughout the series.

Science Interactions' three book series offers a complete science experience within and across all middle school grade levels. Senior author, Bill Aldridge, executive director of the National Science Teachers Association, and other leaders in the science reform movement have developed this unique new series. Science Interactions provides the comprehensive resources necessary to help you meet new challenges in science education and to improve your students' interest and performance in science.
