Ford, Lea Berrang-Ford, 2011-06-27 It is now widely accepted that adaptation will be necessary if we are to manage the risks posed by climate change What we know about adaptation however is limited While there is a well established body of scholarship proposing assessment approaches and explaining concepts few studies have examined if and how adaptation is taking place at a national or regional level Strategic Plan for the U.S. Climate Change Science Program Climate Change Science Program (U.S.), 2003 Scientific and Technical Aerospace Reports ,1995

China faces many modernization challenges but perhaps none is more pressing than that posed by climate change. China must find a new economic growth model that is simultaneously environmentally sustainable, can free it from its dependency on fossil fuels, and lift living standards for the majority of its population. But what does such a model look like? And how can China best make the transition from its present macroeconomic structure to a low carbon future? This ground breaking economic study led by the Stockholm Environment Institute and the Chinese Economists 50 Forum brings together leading international thinkers in economics, climate change, and development to tackle some of the most challenging issues relating to China's low carbon development. This study maps out a deep carbon reduction scenario and analyzes economic policies that shift carbon use and shows how China can take strong and decisive action to make deep reductions in carbon emission over the next forty years while maintaining high economic growth and minimizing adverse effects of a low carbon transition. Moreover, these reductions can be achieved within the finite global carbon budget for greenhouse gas emissions as determined by the hard constraints of climate science. The authors make the compelling case that a transition to a low carbon economy is an essential part of China's development and modernization. Such a transformation would also present opportunities for China to improve its energy security and move its economy higher up the international value chain. They argue that even in these difficult economic times, climate change action may present more opportunities than costs. Such a transformation for China and the rest of the world will not be easy. But it is possible, necessary, and worthwhile to pursue.
