the two studies, are significant, only 10% had achieved the same level of knowledge in the second study. The authors conclude that training is most effective when it is repeated, and that the more often the training is repeated, the more effective it is. The authors also note that the more often the training is repeated, the more likely it is to be effective in the long term.

RE: Two problems, two lightbulbs, one 20-watt incandescent

This is very similar to the 17-watt incandescent. Changing the light bulb, however, would be a fairly common repair, especially on the school. The car going to the shop and back was somewhat different, though.
