Coleman, 1994-12-01 Best Practice in the Diagnosis and Management of Glaucoma Gina M. Wesley, 2006 Abstract Glaucoma is a devastating disease causing significant loss of independence and diminished quality of life for millions of people Glaucoma is a major public health problem in the United States and blindness from glaucoma is believed to impose significant costs annually on the federal government in Social Security benefits lost tax revenues and health care expenditures 1 The following project involves the Healthy People 2010 objective 28 6 of preventing vision loss due to glaucoma and focuses on our community of optometrists to effectively diminish glaucomatous vision loss The project objectives are as follows evaluate current glaucoma treatment standards in Ohio assess best practice glaucoma standards and encourage implementation develop glaucoma management tools for optometrists and ultimately prevent vision loss There are 1800 licensed optometrists in Ohio of which 1200 are Ohio Optometric Association OOA members A survey was administered by mail to 600 randomly selected member doctors Additionally attendees of the 2005 American Optometric Association AOA conference were selected to be surveyed Surveys were passed out at a glaucoma course a primary care course and one course on dry eye There were 90 surveys collected in total from the AOA conference The surveys were then statistically analyzed Focus groups were also organized to obtain optometrists opinions on glaucoma management and potential tools to be used in patient education The total number of surveys collected was 290 Answers were tabulated and it was found that the survey respondents manage 142 275 glaucoma patients on average with a median of 50 and a range of 3 to 2200 Glaucoma screening tests were in concordance with professional guidelines from both the American Optometric Association AOA and the American Academy of Ophthalmology AAO Measurement of intraocular pressure and stereoscopic appearance of the optic nerve head were found to be done by almost every optometrist surveyed Fundus photography was only found to be used 20% of the time Visual field testing is used 75% of the time in screening for glaucoma and 90% of the time in managing glaucoma by our survey respondents it is possible that imaging is taking over as a final tool in making the glaucoma diagnosis and managing it as well Pachymetry is currently valued as part of the standard of care thanks to recent research Prostaglandins are found to be the first choice in medication in treating glaucoma Focus groups were found to agree that standard of care is proper patient management to the highest level more widespread education is needed and that public screenings may soon be necessary to find those at risk and those with glaucoma Although not many studies have been done on evaluating how and if optometrists are meeting the standard of care or best practice as outlined by professional eye care organizations this project provides insight into the realm of care in glaucoma diagnosis and management Optometrists in Ohio are following clinical care guidelines in the majority of recommendations by both the AOA and the AAO However there does exist various shortfalls in diagnosis and management and the need for further education of the general public The standard of care in glaucoma is a dynamic body that must be continually re evaluated and revised in order to provide the best care to patients
