Economic integration, the Nordic models and unemployment

This paper explores Nordic economic-political models in relation to the process of economic internationalization and European integration. Its focus is on the problem of unemployment. I will separate a first wave of integration characteristic of the 1960s and 1970s from a second wave of integration starting in the 1980s. The Nordic countries have adapted their economic-political models to these waves. Since full employment has been a central goal, it is expedient to look at the effects of these transformations from the point of view of unemployment. I conclude with a schematic presentation of a red-green alternative to deal with unemployment and growing inequality.

Two waves of integration

After the war the Nordic economies were reintegrated into the world economy. Nordic currencies were made convertible, and their manufactured goods were freely traded in the Western European markets with the establishment of the EFTA and through agreements with the EEC. Through the GATT, international trade was further liberalized. I call this process the first wave of integration. It consisted mainly in the establishment of stable exchange rates and the reduction of barriers to trade.

Since the middle of the 1980s internationalization of the Nordic economies has sped up. Currency controls and restrictions on international capital mobility have been dismantled. The European Single Market for all types of goods and productive factors is on the verge of being implemented. The Nordic countries will be involved either as full EC members or through the EEA. All the Nordic countries have either joined the EMS or linked the value of their currencies to the ecu. Sweden, Finland and Norway have applied for full membership in the EC. We may call this the second wave of integration. Up to now it consists mainly of the abolition of barriers to international transactions, especially capital mobility. In the future it will imply a much stronger tendency towards harmonization and a greater need for coordination between the participating countries.

From the perspective of small nation states, the difference between the earlier and the ongoing process of integration is critical. The abolition of barriers to trade is of particular importance to small economies. These economies have made use of their

European Economic Integration Jan Fagerberg, Lars Lundberg, 1993 A collection of papers on the issues of European economic integration and its consequences for the Nordic countries It addresses historic and future effects of integration on trade specialization and industrial structure competition and market concentration and other aspects The Economics and Policies of Integration — a Finnish Perspective Kari Alho, Mika Erkkilä, Markku Kotilainen, 2012-12-06 European integration has come a long way since the first steps in the aftermath of the Second World War At that time the neutral European countries chose to stay outside the European Economic Community Those countries that wanted less ambitious cooperation formed the European Free Trade Association Increasing trade dependence between the two groupings was institutionalised when they signed free trade agreements with each other creating thus a wider European free trade area in manufactures The strong push towards deepening integration among EC countries manifested in the Single European Act in 1985 and the dismantling of non tariff barriers to trade and factor flows in the EC by 1993 made it necessary for EFTA countries to secure access on equal conditions to their most important export market and thus prevent trade diversion The ensuing agreement on the European Economic Area responded to these demands but did not resolve the apparent asymmetry in EEA decision making This emanated from the supremacy of EC legislation over EEA rules thus making EFTA countries passively adjust to EC norms Consequently Finland applied for membership in the EC in March 1992 with effect from 1995 The latest phase in the integration process the Treaty on European Union has an aim to further deepening e g the formation of the economic and monetary union by 1999 The European Union and the Nordic Countries Lee Miles, 2005-06-28 The European Union and the Nordic Countries provides an authoritative assessment of the intricate relationship between the EU and the Nordic countries The team of authors includes academics from the five main Nordic countries The authors explore the ramification of wider Nordic EU membership for particular subject areas such as economic and monetary union social and environmental policy agriculture fisheries and foreign and security affairs The authors argue that the impact of two more Nordic countries becoming EU members will prove positive However despite further Nordic accessions seeming inevitable this will not be easy and will require major changes in public opinion in Norway and Iceland Tax Policy in the Nordic Countries Peter Birch Sorensen, 1998-03-30 The Nordic tax systems have recently undergone dramatic changes Tax bases have been broadened marginal tax rates have been cut and the Nordic countries have abandoned the traditional income tax in favour of a dual income tax combining progressive taxation of labour income with a low flat tax rate on capital income Nordic governments have also experimented with new innovative methods of taxing business income This book evaluates the Nordic tax reforms in the light of recent advances in the theory of taxation EMU — A Swedish Perspective Lars Calmfors, Harry Flam, Nils Gottfries, Janne Haaland Matlary, Magnus Jerneck, Rutger Lindahl, Christina Nordh Berntsson, Ewa Rabinowitz, A.
