Guerard, Jr., 2009-12-12 Portfolio construction is fundamental to the investment management process In the 1950s Harry Markowitz demonstrated the benefits of efficient diversification by formulating a mathematical program for generating the efficient frontier to summarize optimal trade offs between expected return and risk The Markowitz framework continues to be used as a basis for both practical portfolio construction and emerging research in financial economics Such concepts as the Capital Asset Pricing Model CAPM and the Arbitrage Pricing

Theory APT for example provide the foundation for setting benchmarks for predicting returns and risk and for performance measurement This volume showcases original essays by some of today s most prominent academics and practitioners in the field on the contemporary application of Markowitz techniques Covering a wide spectrum of topics including portfolio selection data mining tests and multi factor risk models the book presents a comprehensive approach to portfolio construction tools models frameworks and analyses with both practical and theoretical implications

Hedge Fund Returns Christian Alexander Wegener,2011 The present work advances the research on hedge fund returns in three main areas Firstly their statistical properties are assessed in order to understand by what degree the returns of this alternative asset class are subject to non normality autocorrelation and heteroscedasticity Secondly state of the art econometric approaches are used for the purpose of analyzing whether and to what extent monthly hedge fund returns are forecastable Thirdly an effort is made to identify and explain which economic risks affect the performance of the different hedge fund strategy styles in which way The empirical results suggest that monthly hedge fund returns are forecastable by means of multivariate regression models which rely on economic predictors such as changes in interest rates or changes in business outlooks Accounting for the fact that hedge fund returns are non normally distributed heteroscedastic and time varying in their exposure to pervasive risk factors the devised econometric models are found to deliver significant out of sample predictive power The thesis at hand also documents that the interdependencies between the monthly changes of envisaged risk factors and the subsequent hedge fund returns remain remarkably stable throughout time In essence the performance of hedge funds appears to be sensitive to common business cycle movements Altogether the results are relevant to researchers in search of a description and application of contemporary return prediction methods as well as to investors in need of a better understanding of the drivers of hedge fund returns
