Evaluating Theories Of Language Evidence From Disordered Communication:

Evaluating Theories of Language Karen Dodd, Ruth Campbell, Linda Worrall, 2008-04-30 One approach to the study of language has been to describe people whose ability to communicate is impaired. Some researchers have argued that it is possible to identify the component mental processes that contribute to the ability to communicate by describing the ways in which language can break down. Other researchers have expressed doubts about the extent to which data from impairment reflects normal language function. This volume reflects the problems of constructing theory of how the normal brain deals with language from data from impaired individuals from the perspective of a range of disciplines: psycholinguistics, linguistics, neurophysiology and speech language pathology. The chapters include critiques of methodology, application of new technology, the study of bilingual people and cross linguistic studies. A range of language skills is discussed: phonology, prosody, syntax, semantics, reading and spelling in the context of both developmental and acquired impairments, hearing loss, cerebellar dysarthria, subcortical aphasia, cortical aphasia, phonological disorder and dyslexia. This book includes contributions from researchers and clinicians on both sides of the Atlantic as well as from Australia and Hong Kong.

Cross-Linguistic Study of Acquired Reading Disorders Prathibha Karanth, 2012-12-06 The acquisition of reading, the teaching of reading and the difficulties encountered have been of substantial interest to a wide range of researchers and practitioners for centuries. Given the increasing centrality of literacy in modern life, they are now of even greater interest to an ever widening base of professionals. The study of the acquired reading disorders, though in existence for over a century, received enormous impetus with the publication of a seminal paper by Marshall and Newcombe in 1966 leading to a neuropsychological model of reading. Over the last 30 years, within the single case study design, there has been extensive and exceedingly fine grained research on individuals with acquired disorders of reading in an attempt to establish the validity of these models of reading and the human brain. In addition, these models have had considerable influence on models of the acquisition of reading in children and their concomitant difficulties. Much of this research has been in readers of the alphabetic scripts, particularly the opaque English script. During the last decade or so, there has been increasing evidence, particularly in research on reading acquisition, that what is true of alphabetic scripts like English may not be universally true of all of the scripts of the world. This has led to considerable research into the process of learning to read and write and on the factors affecting reading, which are the touchstone of the models within broader cross linguistic and cross cultural perspectives.

The Viability of the Rhetorical Tradition Richard Graff, Arthur E. Walzer, Janet M. Atwill, 2012-02-01 The Viability of the Rhetorical Tradition reconsiders the relationship between rhetorical theory, practice and pedagogy. Continuing the line of questioning begun in the 1980s, contributors examine the duality of a rhetorical canon in determining if past practice can make us more or less able to address contemporary concerns. Also examined is the role of tradition as a limiting or inspiring force, rhetoric as a discipline, rhetoric's contribution to interest in civic education and citizenship and the possibilities digital

Multilingual Norms Madalena Cruz-Ferreira, 2010 Multilinguals are not multiple monolinguals Yet multilingual assessment proceeds through monolingual norms as if fair conclusions were possible in the absence of fair comparison In addition multilingualism concerns what people do with language not what languages do to people Yet research focus remains on multilinguals languages as if languages existed despite their users This book redresses these paradoxes Multilingual scholars teachers and speech language clinicians from Europe Asia Australia and the US contribute the first studies dedicated to multilingual norms those found in real life multilingual development assessment and use Readership includes educators clinicians decision makers and researchers interested in multilingualism

The Social Psychology of Communication Impairments Shelagh Brumfitt, 1999-12-16 The study of communication impairment has up until now failed to include the influence of both social and health psychology in its core understanding of the problem The discipline of neuropsychology has given remarkable insights into language impairments yet we have little knowledge about what influences the behaviour of people with language impairments This book is intended to redress the balance in order to recognise the importance of social behaviour in the complexity of the communication problem by exploring the aspects of social and health psychology which are relevant to the communicatively impaired speaker and looking at ways in which we can understand their predicament more fully

Speech and Language Disorders Associated with Subcortical Pathology Bruce E.
