Kate Lyon underscores the drama that Frederic himself might have woven into his plots. Indeed the contested legacy of Frederic paralleled the competitive spirit and the profound societal shifts that are integral themes in his work especially in novels like The Market Place where the drama of the boardroom mirrors that of the domestic sphere. The Market Place is highly recommended for readers seeking to understand the dynamics of early American capitalism through the lens of literary realism. Frederic's sharp observation and deft storytelling make the novel not only a record of its time but also a timeless study of power, ethics and resilience in a society on the brink of change. Scholars and enthusiasts of American literature will find in Frederic's narrative a compelling bridge between the Gilded Age and the dawn of modernism, asserting its place as not just a best seller of its time but a piece of literature of enduring significance. The Novels of Harold Frederic, Austin Briggs, 1969. The Harold Frederic Edition, Harold Frederic, George E. Fortenberry, 1977. The Harold Frederic Edition: The damnation of Theron Ware, Harold Frederic, 1977. The Harold Frederic Edition, Harold Frederic, 1981. The Lawton Girl, Harold Frederic, 1899. In The Lawton Girl, Mr Harold Frederic has given us another highly realistic and instructive study of life in a modern American manufacturing town. The perils that beset the path of those who have riches, the temptations in the way of those who would be rich, the problems arising before society in the matter of providing ways for the moral elevation and intellectual enlightenment of the laboring classes, these are all involved in the story, but it is the heroism, the self devotion and the final tragic triumph of one poor girl which form the central motive of a discerning and impressive book. Mr Frederic has a wonderful command of his material. The whole atmosphere of Thessaly in its rude new world, incompleteness, its narrow perspective, its tremendous possibilities is admirably suggested. For Mr Frederic is an uncompromising artist and he spares no line, however ungraceful, that will serve to make the picture complete. What one admires most in the work of Mr Frederic is the straightforward, earnest, sincere manner in which he goes to the end in view. Undertaking to depict certain phases of life for his readers, he allows full play to every light and shadow. Realism with him does not mean a seeking out of the low and bestial or even a preference for what is hard and unlovely; it simply means that he will make no deliberate selection in defiance of nature's own truths.
