

Health promoting schools work

The evidence from systematic reviews in high-income countries shows that the HPS approach can contribute to improving children's health by reducing the risk factors for NCDs, e.g. by improving body mass index, increasing physical activity, increasing intake of fruit and vegetables and reducing tobacco use.<sup>1,5,10,11,12,13,14</sup>

In low- and middle-income countries, school-based interventions have been successfully implemented to prevent communicable diseases and other health problems, such as worm infection, malaria, diarrhoea, iron deficiency, malnutrition and oral diseases, over the past 20 years.<sup>15,16</sup> However, evidence to prove the effectiveness of the HPS approach in controlling the risk factors for NCDs is scarce, but promising.
