The River Where You Forgot My Name Corrie Williamson, 2019-10-03 Winner Montana Book Award Honor Book 2019 The River Where You Forgot My Name travels between early 1800s Virginia and Missouri and present day western Montana a place where bats sail the river of dark In their crosscutting the poems in this collection reflect on American progress technology exploration and environment and the ever changing landscape at the intersection of wilderness and civilization Three of the book s five sections follow poet Corrie Williamson s experiences while living for five years in western Montana

The remaining sections are persona poems written in the voice of Julia Hancock Clark wife of William Clark who she married soon after he returned from his western expedition with Meriwether Lewis Julia lived with Clark in the then frontier town of St Louis until her early death in 1820 She offers a foil for the poet s first person Montana narrative and enriches the historical perspective of the poetry providing a female voice to counterbalance the often male centered discovery and frontier narrative The collection shines with all too human moments of levity tragedy and beauty such as when Clark names a river Judith after his future wife not knowing that everyone calls her Julia or when the poet on a hike to Goldbug Hot Springs imagines a mercury poisoned Lewis waking with the dawn between his teeth Williamson turns a curious and critical eye on the motives and impact of expansionism unpacking some of the darker ramifications of American hunger for land and resources These poems combine breathtaking natural beauty with backbreaking human labor all in the search for something that approaches grace Old and New World Lyrics Clinton Scollard,1888 Lyrics of the Dawn Clinton Scollard,1902
