Framing A Strategic Approach For Joint Officer Management:

Framing a Strategic Approach for Joint Officer Management Harry Thie, Rand Corporation, Margaret C. Harrell, Roland J. Yardley, Marian Oshiro, Holly Ann Potter, 2005 The Goldwater Nichols Act of 1986 forged a cultural revolution in the U S armed forces by improving the way in which the Department of Defense DoD prepares for and executes its mission in part by addressing joint officer personnel policies and management requirements In the past 15 years successes in Iraq Operations Desert Shield Storm Bosnia and Afghanistan and more recently in Operation Iraqi Freedom testify to the effectiveness of the joint military force and its warfighting potential However recent studies and assessments have suggested that a strategic approach for joint officer management in terms of education assignment and promotion is necessary to address the challenges that DoD confronts in preparing officers to serve in joint organizations and leadership positions This RAND research sponsored by the Office of the Under Secretary of Defense Personnel and Readiness revisits Goldwater Nichols and defines and frames a strategic approach to further officers development in joint matters Rand web site

Framing a Strategic Approach for Reserve Component Joint Officer Management Harry Thie, 2006 This research frames a strategic approach to reserve joint officer management that addresses the requirements for and the supply of joint officers in the reserve component and also accounts for the unique constraints and challenges involved in joint officer management for reserve active status list officers Because the work required of many reservists is becoming increasingly joint the need for a systematic examination of how reserve active status list officers are trained and developed in joint matters is becoming more and more urgent especially given the dramatic increase in the use of the reserve forces A strategic approach to joint officer management for reserve active status list officers must assess the need for officers with prior joint knowledge experience and acculturation in certain positions as well as their availability The authors estimate the supply of joint reserve officers and make several recommendations to help implement a strategic approach to reserve component joint officer management

Framing a Strategic Approach for Joint Officer Management , 2005 The Goldwater Nichols Act GNA of 1986 forged a cultural revolution in the U S Armed Forces by improving the way the Department of Defense DoD prepares for and executes its mission Title IV of the GNA addresses joint officer personnel policies and provides specific personnel management requirements for the identification education training promotion and assignment of officers to joint duties Recent studies suggest the need for DoD to revisit joint manpower matters and develop a strategic approach to joint officer management and joint professional military education JPME Additionally the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 directed an independent study of joint officer management JPME and the roles of the Secretary of Defense and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff While the independent study was in progress the General Accounting Office GAO conducted an assessment of DoD actions to implement provisions in law that address the development of officers in joint matters It also evaluated DoD s ability to fully respond to the provisions of the GNA The GAO stated that a significant impediment affecting DoD's ability to fully realize the cultural change that was envisioned by the act is the fact that DoD has not taken a strategic approach to develop officers in joint matters. A strategic approach to human resource management determines the need for critical workforce characteristics given missions goals and desired organizational outcomes, assesses availability of the characteristics now and in the future and suggests changes in management practices for personnel with the characteristics to minimize gaps between need and availability. This report applies a strategic approach to the development of officers in joint matters.

Framing a Strategic Approach for Reserve Component Joint Officer Management, 2006. The Department of Defense DoD management processes for active component joint duty assignments, education and training were built around the solid foundation provided by the Goldwater-Nichols Act (GNA) of 1986. However, it is being increasingly recognized that the current approach to joint matters needs to evolve from its current static format to a more dynamic approach that broadens the definitions of joint matters and joint qualifications and allows for multiple paths to growing the number of joint officers. An important extension of the current strategic plan is a more explicit and strategic consideration of reserve component joint officer management. The need for a systematic examination of how reserve component joint officers are trained and developed is becoming increasingly urgent given the dramatic increase in the use of the reserve forces. Building on work done earlier for the active component with respect to joint officer management, this research focuses on framing a strategic approach to reserve joint officer management that does the following: 1. addresses the requirements for and the supply of joint officers for the reserve component and 2. accounts for the unique constraints of and challenges to reserve joint officer management. A strategic approach for reserve component joint officer management must deliberately determine which jobs require joint experience or which provide it. In particular, given the current strategic intent of the DoD with respect to jointness, push it to its lowest appropriate level, the need for joint experience should be measurable in a much larger number of billets, in particular in billets internal to the service. Moreover, valid joint experience might now be provided by service in billets internal to the services, particularly those associated with Joint Task Forces (JTFs) with service component commands and with joint planning and operations.

Who is "joint"? Sheila Nataraj Kirby, Al Crego, Harry Thie, 2006. Several recent studies, including a study authorized under the 2002 National Defense Authorization Act, have indicated the need for the Department of Defense (DoD) to update the practice policy and law applied to Joint Officer Management (JOM) and Joint Professional Military Education. In 2003, DoD asked the RAND Corporation to undertake an analysis that would provide guidance on officer training and development in joint matters. This work builds on that earlier effort. As a lead in to this study, the 2005 Joint Officer Management Census survey polled officers serving in billets that were likely to require joint experience or joint education or provide such experience. More than 21,000 survey responses were collected. This report examines the extent to which officers believe their jobs provide them with joint experience or require them to have had prior joint education, training or experience, and it examines how respondents' answers differ across organizations and military services in which the billets are located This report provides a comprehensive reference source for the JOM survey data and demonstrates how the data can be used to anchor a strategic approach to joint officer management

Handbook of Military Administration Jeffrey A. Weber, Johan Eliasson, 2007-12-07 While policy makers are perpetually conceptualizing new reform packages the actual enactment of those reforms is typically more challenging Remarkably the one public institution that is able to meet that challenge is also the largest The United States Department of Defense which employs over 600 000 people and deals with 500 billion in fundin Advancing the U.S. Air Force's Force-Development Initiative S. Craig Moore, Marygail K. Brauner, 2008-01-23 The following steps are recommended for consistent efficient and effective plans and means for improving the development of U S Air Force officers in their career fields 1 identify the demand for jobs in the field grades major lieutenant colonel and colonel 2 ascertain the backgrounds that officers have accumulated assess the supply 3 compare supply with demand gap analysis and 4 plan ways to close the gaps Qualifying Military Health Care Officers as "joint" Sheila Nataraj Kirby, Harry Thie, 2009 The challenges facing the U S military at home and abroad have highlighted the need for officers including health care officers who are educated and trained in joint matters and prepared to take on the new roles and responsibilities demanded by the current environment This research part of a larger project examining the preparation and support of leaders in the medical field in the civilian and military sectors evaluates the need for and feasibility of qualifying health care officers as joint officers Traditionally officers could attain joint qualification by attending joint professional military education courses and serving in billets that provide them with joint duty experience and are included on the Joint Duty Assignment List JDAL New policy states that officers can also receive this experience in non JDAL billets However both the traditional and current policies preclude the inclusion of certain positions particularly health care officer positions on the JDAL and allow waivers on a case by case basis from the joint requirement for promotion to general or flag officer positions In addition to an extensive policy review the study included an assessment of data from the 2005 Joint Officer Management Census survey suggesting that some health care officers are indeed serving in billets that need and provide joint duty experience for which they should receive credit The British National Bibliography Arthur James Wells, 2006 Employed Physician Networks: A Guide to Building Strategic Advantage, Value, and Financial Sustainability David W.
