

EUROPEAN DEFENCE FOR SECURITY AND PEACE

ABSTRACT

The new geopolitical scenario requires the EU to create a European defence system, also as a European pillar of NATO. The EU urgently needs to develop an autonomous hard power, while also strengthening its traditional soft power. For security and economic reasons, the EU should prefer an integrated defence system to the mere coordination of national defences. Recent polls show that this is also the citizens' preference. A dual model, including an autonomous military capacity and the ability to draw and coordinate national forces, could be set up rapidly, exploiting the Permanent Structured Cooperation on security and defence. A European Defence Union requires adequate financing and democratic governance. EU defence shall be at the service of peace and could be partly put at the disposal of the UN. The EU needs to think out of the box and act with ambition and speed.
