instruments demonstrates Uganda's commitment to meet international standards in protection of wildlife and reduction of wildlife crime in the country. However, even with a strong policy and commitment to international standards, wildlife crime still occurs in Uganda, which is a serious threat to the survival of some key iconic species in the country. One of the reasons is that the wildlife legislation and other laws do not reflect the standards set in the policy or the international requirements. Uganda is working towards review of its laws to catch up with its policies and international standards, and hopefully this will address the gap and weaknesses in the wildlife legislation.

Convictions at Sentencing Julian V Roberts, Andreas von Hirsch, 2014-10-01 This latest volume in the Penal Theory and Penal Ethics series addresses one of the oldest questions in the field of criminal sentencing: should an offender's previous convictions affect the sentence? Although there is an extensive literature on the definition and use of criminal history information, the emphasis here is on the theoretical and normative aspects of considering previous convictions at sentencing. Several authors explore the theory underlying the practice of mitigating the punishments for first offenders, while others put forth arguments for enhancing sentences for recidivists. Federal Bureau of Prisons Annual Report United States.

Congress. Senate. Committee on the Judiciary. Subcommittee on National Penitentiaries, 1973 Crime and Punishment in Britain Nigel Walker, 2010-02-01 This book, first published in 1965, describes the British penal system as it existed in the 1960s. It describes how the system defined, accounted for, and disposed of offenders. As an early work in criminology, it focuses on differences between and changes in the views held by legislators, lawyers, philosophers, and the man in the street on the topic of crime and punishment. Walker is interested in the extent to which their views reflect the facts established and the theories propounded by psychologists, anthropologists, and sociologists. The confusion between criminologists and penal reformers was initially encouraged by criminologists themselves many of whom were penal reformers Strictly speaking penal reform according to Walker was a spare time occupation for criminologists just as canvassing for votes is an ancillary task for political scientists The difference is that the criminologists spare time occupation is more likely to take a moral form and when it does so it is more likely to interfere with what should be purely criminological thoughts The machinery of justice involves the interaction of human beings in their roles of victim offender policeman judge supervisor or custodian and there must be a place for human sympathy in the understanding and still more in the treatment of individual offenders This book is concerned with the efficiency of the system as a means to these ends One of the main reasons why penal institutions have continued to develop more slowly than other social services is that they are a constant battlefield between emotions and prejudices This is a great empirical study against which the policy maker and criminologist can measure progress or regression in British criminals and punishments Nigel Walker is Emeritus Wolfson Professor of Criminology and former director of the Institute of Criminology at the University of Cambridge He is the author of numerous books including A Man without Loyalties Behavior and Misbehavior and Aggravation Mitigation and Mercy in English Criminal Justice
