Abstract: The objective of this paper is to delineate the meaning of accountability for business ethics in the context of the policy document "Financial Markets Authority Corporate Governance in New Zealand Principles and Guidelines". The policy document, first published by the Securities Commission in 2004 and revised in December 2014 by the Financial Markets Authority, provides the textual content for the interpretive analysis undertaken in this study. The purpose of the interpretation is to understand how accountability for business ethics acquires meaning in the policy document. The findings of this study indicate the manifestation of a strong sense of traditional accountability to shareholders but significant gaps in accountability towards non-equity stakeholders. The principle-based approach to corporate governance and the lack of legal backing are major drawbacks in implementing accountability for business ethics. We recommend the enactment of codified laws to enforce accountability for business ethics.

INTRODUCTION

The significance of this interpretive study on business ethics arises from recent corporate governance failings around the globe and, in particular, concerns raised by the Financial Markets Authority (FMA) on similar developments in New Zealand (FMA, 2014a; Vaughan, 2013). In New Zealand, approximately NZ$8.5 billion of investors' (depositors') funds were lost or mismanaged by finance companies (SHARKPATROL, 2012). Attempts by the FMA to strengthen financial markets in New Zealand include investigation and enforcement activities and a review of the Securities Commission New Zealand 2004 version of the Corporate Governance Principles and Guidelines (NZSC, 2004b). Issues surrounding corporate governance and integrity of financial markets have been primary concerns in the investigation and enforcement activities by the FMA (FMA, 2014a). Considering the finance company failures, the FMA felt that it was appropriate to reconsider the 2004 version of Corporate Governance Principles and Guidelines incorporated in (FMA, 2014a). The mandate of the FMA is to promote "high standards of behaviour" and respond "to harm that threaten the integrity of the financial market" (FMA, 2014a, p.4).
