Marital assimilation: Interethnic marriage in Britain

Raya Muttarak (raya.muttarak@st-antony's.oxford.ac.uk)

Abstract

One way to investigate a degree to which ethnic minorities integrated into the host society is through looking at trends of intermarriage. In Britain, the figures from the 1991 Census indicate that interethnic unions account for 1.3 percent of all heterosexual partnerships (Berrington 1996). Considering each ethnic group separately, the rates of intermarriage are found to be high in some ethnic groups, e.g., 20 percent and 17 percent for the Black Caribbean and the Chinese respectively and relatively low (1 to 4 percent) amongst the ethnic members from South Asia (Modood et al. 1997).

Intermarriage is regarded as an important indicator of the degree of assimilation because it denotes the extent to which a minority member is able to mingle in the host society's marriage market. Since intermarriage reveals the existence of interaction across group boundaries, it is considered to be an intimate link between social groups. The fact that each ethnic group experiences different pattern of intermarital relationships reflects group variations in assimilation process. Certain group attributes and community variations such as the availability of potential partners in the minority groups and out-groups and social and spatial proximity between groups are believed to affect marriage behaviour to a certain extent. Individual attributes are also of importance in determining the propensity to intermarry. Such demographic variables as age and nativity as well as socioeconomic characteristics like educational attainment affects one's preference and opportunity to meet partners from different groups.

Amongst a few studies of ethnic intermarriage in Britain, the extant ones appear to focus only on a basic picture of the number and trends of interethnic partnerships rather than examining factors that contribute to cross-group unions (Bagley 1972; Berrington 1994, 1996; Coleman 1981). Besides, the most recent research available was based on the data from the early 1990s, dating back more than a decade ago. This study, hence, aims to investigate the pattern of ethnic intermarriage in contemporary British society by combining data from five consecutive quarters of the Quarterly Labour Force Survey conducted in the year 2002 and 2003. The study also attempts to explain why certain individuals chose to engage in interethnic relationship despite a general trend of assortative mating, especially ethnic homogamy. Quantitative data analysis, particularly multivariate analyses, is applied here since it allows us to estimate the overall picture of ethnic intermarriage in the UK. The Labour Force Survey which is a nationally representative dataset covering 60,000 households all over Britain is appropriate for this study not only because it is the most recent survey available but it also contains rich information on each individual interviewed. This would enable us to depict a comprehensive picture of intergroup and ethnic relations in Britain through the lenses of interethnic unions.

Ethnic Groups and Marital Choices Madeline Kalbach, 2011-11-01 Since the late nineteenth century the rate of intermarriage between members of different European ethnic and cultural groups in Canada has increased and resulted in a gradual blending of these communities This book the first detailed comparative study of ethno religious intermarriage provides the background for understanding the dynamics of intermarriage in a culturally pluralistic society like Canada Using for the first time data from the 1871 Census of Canada in conjunction with data from the 1971 Census Madeline Richard delineates the general patterns of ethnic intermarriage in 1871 and 1971 and specifically considers the trends for the English Irish Scotch French and Germans Choosing a number of characteristics such as level of literacy nativity age and place of residence for the husbands the author determines the odds for their marrying outside their communities She also examines the socio demographic characteristics such as group size sex ratio per cent urban and level of literacy of each group to determine the marriage patterns of the husbands Richard s findings confirm that marital assimilation was occurring to some extent as early as 1871 and that the rate of intermarriage has doubled since then Of particular interest are the major shifts exhibited by Irish Scottish and German husbands who in 1871 overwhelmingly married within their community while in 1971 they typically found their mates outside This book is not only about marital patterns it is also about the ethnic groups themselves It gives detailed descriptions of the English Irish Scottish French German Italian Dutch Polish Scandinavian Ukrainian and other groups their immigration history settlement patterns and socio demographic characteristics as these all have some bearing on patterns of mate selection

Renaissance humanism and ethnicity before race Ian Campbell,2015-11-01 The modern ideology of race so important in twentieth century Europe incorporates both a theory of human societies and a theory of human bodies Ian Campbell s new study examines how the elite in early modern Ireland spoke about human societies and human bodies and demonstrates that this elite discourse was grounded in a commitment to the languages and sciences of Renaissance Humanism Emphasising the education of all of early modern Ireland s antagonistic ethnic groups in common European university and grammar school traditions Campbell explains both the workings of the learned English critique of Irish society and the no less learned Irish response Then he turns to Irish debates on nobility medicine and theology in order to illuminate the problem of human heredity He concludes by demonstrating how the Enlightenment swept away these humanist theories of body and society prior to the development of modern racial ideology in the late eighteenth century Households of Faith Nancy

Christie,2002 Annotation An examination of the intersection of religious and familial discourse over the course of two centuries Households of Faith examines a variety of religious traditions with a particular focus on the way in which religious communities define gender identities The authors explore the boundaries drawn in religious discourse between the private and public offering a revisionist perspective on the theoretical framework of separate spheres By analysing gender relations within the matrix of the family they explore both the conflicts and interdependency of gender roles Imagined Homes

Hans Werner,2012-10-18 Imagined Homes Soviet German Immigrants in Two Cities is a study of the social and cultural integration of two migrations of German speakers from Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union to Winnipeg Canada in the late 1940s and Bielefeld Germany in the 1970s Employing a cross national comparative framework Hans Werner reveals that the imagined trajectory of immigrant lives influenced the process of integration into a new urban environment Winnipeg s migrants chose a receiving society where they knew they would again be a minority group in a foreign country while Bielefeld s newcomers believed they were going home and were unprepared for the conflict between their imagined homeland and the realities of post war Germany Werner also shows that differences in the way the two receiving societies perceived immigrants and the degree to which secularization and the sexual and media revolutions influenced these perceptions in the two cities were crucially important in the immigrant experience Marriage Vows and Racial Choices

Jessica Vasquez-Tokos,2017-02-14 Choosing whom to marry involves more than emotion as racial politics cultural mores and local demographics all shape romantic choices In Marriage Vows and Racial Choices sociologist Jessica Vasquez Tokos explores the decisions of Latinos who marry either within or outside of their racial and ethnic groups Drawing from in depth interviews with nearly 50 couples she examines their marital choices and how these unions influence their identities as Americans Vasquez Tokos finds that their experiences in childhood adolescence and young adulthood shape their perceptions of race which in turn influence their romantic expectations Most Latinos marry other Latinos but those who intermarry tend to marry whites She finds that some Latina women who had domineering fathers assumed that most Latino men shared this trait and gravitated toward white men who differed from their fathers Other Latina respondents who married white men fused ideas of race and class and perceived whites as higher status and considered themselves to be marrying up Latinos who married non Latino minorities African Americans Asian Americans and Native Americans often sought out non white partners because they shared similar experiences of racial marginalization Latinos who married Latinos of a different national origin expressed a desire for shared cultural commonalities with their partners but like those who married whites often associated their own national origin groups with oppressive gender roles Vasquez Tokos also investigates how racial and cultural identities are maintained or altered for the respondents children Within Latino white marriages biculturalism in contrast with Latinos adopting a white American identity is likely to emerge For instance white women who married Latino men often embraced aspects of Latino culture and passed it along to their children Yet for these children upholding Latino cultural ties depended on their proximity to other Latinos particularly extended family members Both location and family relationships shape how parents and children from interracial families understand themselves culturally As interracial marriages become more common Marriage Vows and Racial Choices shows how race gender and class influence our marital choices and personal lives

The Orange Order Eric P. Kaufmann,2009-04-17 Based on unprecedented access to the Order s internal documents this book provides the first systematic social history of the Orange Order the Protestant association dedicated to maintaining the British connection in Northern Ireland Kaufmann charts the Order's path from the peak of its influence in the early 1960s to its present day crisis Along the way he sketches a portrait of many of Orangeism's leading figures from ex Prime Minister John Andrews to Ulster Unionist Party politicians like Martin Smyth James Molyneux and David McNarry and also includes the highly revealing correspondence with adversaries such as Ian Paisley and David Trimble Packed with analyses of mass membership trends and attitudes the book also takes care to tell the story of the Order from below as well as from above In the process it argues that the traditional Unionism of West Ulster is giving way to the more militant Unionism of Antrim and Belfast which is winning the hearts of the younger generation in cities and towns throughout the province Choice, 1992 High Ideals and Noble Intentions Peter R.
